DOMINION LINEMAN JASON GEORGE HELPS PLANT
HUNDREDS OF ENERGY-SAVING IDEAS ALL OVER VIRGINIA.
Planting trees and shrubs to shade outdoor heat pumps and air conditioning units helps reduce their workload and can provide real savings on your home's energy costs. Trees can help reduce heating and cooling bills in other ways, too. Trees that lose their leaves in winter let the sun's warmth shine through. And in summer, their foliage creates shade and helps keep homes cool. Effective landscaping can help lower energy bills by up to 25%. Today, more than ever, it's important we all work together to save energy. That's why Dominion is investing in a wide-ranging energy conservation plan to support Virginia's goal of reducing the state's electricity consumption 10% by 2022—while helping customers use less electricity and make the most of their energy dollars. Fairfax County Public Schools projects that its student population will increase by 14,000 and swell to a historic high of 182,000 pupils over the next five years.

After a period of relatively stagnant enrollment, the school system experienced a significant bump in its population this year, when an extra 3,700 additional students, roughly equal to the populations of Herndon and South Lakes high schools combined, showed up on its attendance sheets.

School officials attribute the student increase in large part to the downturn in the housing market. Fewer families appear to moving out of Fairfax County and into outer suburbs like Loudoun and Prince William counties, mostly likely because they cannot sell their current house or afford to move, said Dean Tistadt, the schools' chief operating officer.

Tistadt also speculates that several parents who either had enrolled or planned to enroll their children in private school might be opting for the county public school system to save money.

"I think some students are returning from private schools. We hear it from principals all the time," he said.

THE POPULATION boom is not good news for school communities like the one at West Springfield High School, which has been lobbying for renovation funding that will mostly likely be diverted to handle school capacity shortages.

At a Nov. 10 work session, Tistadt proposed the School Board leave all uncommitted funding in the capital plan free until at least next summer,

Koger Pleads Guilty to Embezzlement

Still faces charges including attempted capital murder of police officers in Fairfax County.

By Ken Moore
The Connection

Jeffrey Scott Koger admitted to embezzling approximately $3 million from 400 homeowner associations using 140 bank wire transfers, according to statement of facts filed Monday, Nov. 10 with his plea agreement in federal court in Alexandria.

Koger, 39 of Oak Hill, embezzled the money and invested funds in personal accounts and businesses he was involved in, including: $733,000 in Jordan's 8 restaurant on Capitol Hill; $374,960 to pay a contractor to remodel his Oak Hill house and the Tri-Fitness, Inc. facility in Annandale; $40,000 for a down payment on a 2005 Chevrolet Corvette convertible; $60,000 for a down payment on a house in New Mexico; and $56,668 for windows and doors for his home.

Koger was the former chief financial officer of his father's real estate management firm, Koger Management Group, which filed for bankruptcy in July 2007. Robert Koger, the father, reported to the Fairfax City Police in November 2006 that he believed his son Jeffrey Koger had embezzled $800,000, kicking off the investigation.

Jeffrey Koger pleaded guilty Monday, Nov. 10 in federal court in Alexandria to wire fraud and income tax evasion.

Jeffrey Koger, already jailed in Fairfax County Adult Detention Center on other charges, waived prosecution by indictment and consented that his plea agreement could continue Monday.

U.S. District Court Judge Leonie M. Brinkema is currently scheduled to sentence Jeffrey Koger in February.

He faces a maximum penalty of 25 years in prison, $500,000 in fines and full restitution, according to Acting U.S. Attorney Dana J. Boente.

"The defendant took various actions to conceal his scheme from the homeowners' associations and their auditors," according to agreed upon statement of facts. "If the defendant received a complaint that money was missing from a particular homeowners' association account, he would provide a false explanation."

Jeffrey Koger also evaded $775,273 in federal income taxes by failing to file personal income tax returns from 2003-2006, according to the Internal Revenue Service. In 2005, he received taxable income of more than $810,257.

The IRS, Secret Service, FBI, Fairfax City, Fairfax County and Alexandria City police departments investigated the case, which is being prosecuted by Assistant U.S. Attorney Jack Hanly and Trial Attorney Caryn Mark, of the Department of Justice's Tax Division.

JEFFREY KOGER ALSO FACES three counts of attempted capital murder of police officers, two counts of aggravated maiming and five counts of use of a firearm in the commission of felonies in Fairfax County courts.

According to police reports and testimony at Koger's preliminary hearing in June, Koger stopped his 1990 Jeep Cherokee behind a taxicab stopped at a traffic light at the corner of Seminary Road and North Beauregard Street in Alexandria in the early morning of Feb. 2, 2008.

Koger got out of his Jeep, walked to the taxi driver's window, and fired several shots into the cab. The driver was seriously injured.

Koger shot two other men in another car, who escaped him by driving into the Fairfax County Police Station on Franconia Road.

Koger eventually fled in his Jeep to elude a Virginia State trooper. Koger crashed into a traffic control box in front of Springfield Shopping Mall, and got out of his car with

Bulova Runs For Chair

Republican Herrity may also throw his hat in ring to succeed Connolly.

By Julia O'Donoghue
The Connection

Fairfax County chairman Gerry Connolly (D-At-large) won his new position in the U.S. Congress on Nov. 4, but two of his colleagues on the Board of Supervisors have been preparing for his departure for months.

Supervisor Sharon Bulova (D-Braddock) and Supervisor Patrick Herrity (R-Springfield) have made little secret of their interest in chairman's position, especially since Connolly was the favorite to take Virginia's 11th Congressional District.

Even before Connolly made his election night victory speech, Bulova shared plans for her county chairman campaign kick off Nov. 12.

Herrity, who is chief operating officer and chief financial officer of Arrowhead Global Solutions, a local technology company, said he will make a final decision regarding the chairman race later this week. The Springfield supervisor has been shaking hands at events like the Vienna Fourth of July festival and others miles outside his district for months.

The countywide race to succeed Connolly is likely to be short and fast. The chairman will step down in early January and county officials expect a special election to replace him will occur in early February, about one month later. The new chairman would serve out the rest of Connolly's term and has the chance to stand re-election in 2011.

> "I have done a very good job of steering the county through tough fiscal times before and I will again."
> — Supervisor Sharon Bulova

BOTH Bulova and Herrity, who is still weighing a campaign against personal factors, said the economic downturn and Fairfax County's budget shortfall would be their top priorities as chairman.

If the real estate tax rate stays at the same level, Fairfax is facing a projected $500 million shortfall in the county's $3.4 billion general fund during next fiscal year. Fairfax has already had to wrestle with a $65 million budget shortfall in the current fiscal year, which started July 1, and required county agencies to make mid-year cuts.

If the supervisors had to wrestle with just a $400 million budget shortfall next year, they would be looking at cutting roughly 12 percent of Fairfax's total general fund. According to county staff, $400 million is equivalent to what the county sets aside for public works, courts, community development, parks and recreation, libraries, administrative and support services, county transit and Metro funding combined.

Budget staff predicts that the tight fiscal situation would continue beyond next year and that the county could take several budget cycles to recover from the current downturn.

Bulova, 61, who has sat on the board since 1987, said she is the most qualified person to steer the county through tough financial times. She has served as the supervisors' budget committee chairman for all but four of the past 20 years. Former county chairman Tom Davis headed the committee in the early 1990s.

Bulova said she played a pivotal role in guiding the county out of its last fiscal crisis in the mid-1990s.

"I was the budget chairman when we took action to address the last downturn, and we emerged from that recession in better shape than we had been in when the downturn began," she said.

The county found new and better ways to partner with the non-profit and faith communities to deliver services. As a result of the last recession, the supervisors also created a revenue stabilization fund, which the county is tapping right now, to provide "rainy day" money for the county if it ever faced a mid-year budget shortfall, she said.

"Looking ahead, I want to find those same opportunities to pull out of this current recession in a sound and improved manner," said Bulova.

As chairman, Bulova wants to focus on "getting us back on our fiscal feet so we can emerge from the recession better than ever."

STILL, Herrity, 48, said it might be time for a new perspective and blames Bulova, in part, for the county's current financial crisis.

When Koger fired his weapon, the trooper and Washington Metropolitan Transit Authority officers shot back, hitting Koger in the midsection. He was hospitalized with life-threatening injuries, but recovered.

IN AUGUST, Koger's defense attorney, Peter D. Greenspun, filed notice of Koger's possible intent to claim the insanity defense.

At Koger's preliminary hearing, Greenspun asked the trooper if Koger said anything after crashing his car.

"The only thing he said out loud was, 'Help me, they're coming to get me,'" the trooper testified.

Koger faces more than three life terms in prison if convicted in Fairfax County Circuit Court.

His trial on those charges is currently scheduled for February, after his sentencing hearing in federal court.

Getting To Know . . .

Scott S. Drummond, physical education teacher and powerlifting record holder.

In his 10th year as a physical education teacher at Newington Forest Elementary School, Scott S. Drummond knows a lot about how to stay fit and healthy. It's a philosophy that extends beyond the school gym and into the arena of competitive powerlifting, where Drummond holds six world records. Here, he talks about work, working out and the ultimate in exercise — parenting a 2-year old.

Profile

Family.

My wife, Jennifer Drummond is the assistant principal at Union Mill Elementary in Clifton. I have a 2-year-old daughter, Calista Lee Drummond.

Education

I graduated from George Mason University with a degree in physical education and health.

What was your first job?

My first job was a trainer in a health club in Raleigh, N.C. at the age of 15.

Hobbies, interests, activities.

I spend a great deal of time training for powerlifting. I also love home projects. I recently built a deck on my house, built a movie room, built a laundry room and a full bath in our basement.

How do you spend your spare time?

My powerlifting expenses are paid for by my sponsor- Charles Staley, the creator of EDT (Escalating Density Training). I work with athletes on his site developing training programs and helping with training advice. That takes up a bit of my free time as well.

I also spend as much time with my wife and daughter as possible in outdoor activities such as going to the park or zoo.

Favorite local restaurants.

Rio Grande Cafe, Pei Wei, Sweetwater Tavern.

Community concerns.

Being a teacher in Fairfax County, I have concerns with the huge budget deficit that we are facing and its present and future affects on school programs, job cuts and salary issues.

How did you get interested in powerlifting?

I spent many years as a bodybuilder. I did pretty well winning the Mr. Virginia overall in my first competition. I've won several competitions along the way as well as being chosen AAU athlete of the year.

About three years ago, I decided to make the switch to powerlifting. I entered my first local competition and set two records.

What records do you hold?

My best lifts are a Raw (no equipment except weight belt and wraps) — bench press, 520 pounds; squat, 700 pounds; deadlift, 720 pounds.

Scott S. Drummond is in his 10th year as a Newington Forest Elementary P.E. teacher.

I currently hold two local, 14 state and six world records in the 259-pound and 275-pound weight classes. I'm also currently ranked 23rd in the country in the squat and 21st for bench press.

I have another competition coming up at the end of February where I plan to break the single lift bench press world record in the Southern Powerlifting Federation of 515 pounds.

How often do you train?

I train three days a week at Gold's Gym in Manassas. I also am on my feet all day as a physical education teacher, then when I get home I chase my 2-year-old around the house.

Centenarians Provide 100-Year View

The Virginia Historical Society (VHS) hosted a lecture and screening of the television documentary "Witness to a Century," on Thursday, Oct. 30. The one-hour oral history film, a collaboration between the VHS and the Community Idea Stations (WCVE), tells the story of the 20th century in Virginia through the eyes of centenarians whose lives spanned the 20th century.

Six of the 10 100-year-olds that were interviewed about their lives, including Amy Feinstein of Springfield, were at the society to see the final version of the film. The screening drew hundreds of members of the general public. The centenarians shared their 600 years of combined historical memories about the 1918 flu epidemic, segregated schools, the introduction of radio and TV, the Great Depression, transportation changes and small-town jobs.

The VHS/WCVE collaboration was prompted by the fact that Americans are aging in greater numbers than ever before. More than 65,000 centenarians live in the United States. Testimony from Virginia's centenarians will also be used to produce a curriculum guide for use in community senior centers. Witness to a Century is scheduled to air on WCVE public television on Thursday, Nov. 13 at 10 p.m.

People Notes

Bien Do and AnhDao Nguyen of Springfield, parents of Thao Do, have received the Virginia Tech Parent of the Year award for 2008-09, given to the parents of the student who wrote the winning essay that explains how their parent has impacted their academic goals. Thao Do, a junior majoring in mechanical engineering, developed an interest in nanotechnology because of its potential applications in the biomedical field. She has focused her research on developing robust microscopic channels and particles, and has co-authored a journal article, which she presented to the American Physics Society. She has been involved with the Society of Women Engineers.

Board Rethinks Renovation Schedule

when Fairfax has a better grip on how much money the school system would need to deal with its enrollment increase.

The West Springfield community had hoped some of that undesignated capital funding, which won't be available for least four years, would be allocated toward the school's renovation project.

They expected staff and School Board members to start in early December working on a traditional capital improvement plan, one in which West Springfield had a good shot at getting its renovation project funded.

Some of the renovation advocates have been contacting School Board members for months to make sure West Springfield was added to the schools' capital project proposal. They said they felt blindsided by Tistadt's proposal.

"It was very surprising and disappointing. Not only the decision that was made but how it was made," said Erik Hawkins, leader of SOAR West Springfield, an organization advocating for the school's renovation.

Tistadt assured SOAR members at the community meeting two weeks ago that he would keep the capital funding process transparent and Hawkins said he thought Tistadt's recent actions had violated that vow.

The county official gave no warning to the community about his proposal to put off making specific capital funding allocations, he said.

"The manner in which it was conducted doesn't seem like it was so transparent. What has changed so dramatically?" asked Hawkins.

TISTADT contests that a lot has changed dramatically since the School Board began considering a revision of its capital improvement program.

In the meeting two weeks ago, he warned the community several times that the school system's population boom could derail renovation plans, including those at West Springfield.

"I talked about transparency, but I made no commitments to them," he said

Tistadt said the proposal came up quickly because the schools' new enrollment numbers are new.

"Those enrollment projects are fairly recent. … If we get to 182,000 students, it could cause serious problems for this school system," said Tistadt.

The county expects the enrollment increases to span all regions and grade levels in the system. But adding 14,000 students in five years is roughly equivalent to expanding by 3 1/2 new Robinson Secondary Schools.

Tistadt said he is already seeing serious overcrowding problems in places like Annandale High School, which is already 800 students over its building capacity.

TISTADT had recommended that the School Board set up citizen advisory committees in each of the county's four planning districts to focus on how schools in each of those regions could deal with local enrollment increases and capacity problems. The proposal is similar to those brought forward by some School Board members who have wanted to push Fairfax to take a more comprehensive approach to school redistricting.

"It would be a comprehensive planning type process. The committees would give the board good information about the communities," said Tistadt.

THE SCHOOL BOARD could decide to pass on Tistadt's recommendations and move forward with a more traditional capital improvement program.

But if they do start assigning money to new projects, West Springfield could still be at more of a disadvantage than the community was just a few weeks ago.

Earlier this fall, the school had been ranked second among high schools and 10th overall on a list of approximately 60 schools in need of renovation. But in an updated version of the list released Nov. 10, West Springfield had dropped 13 spots to become the 23rd neediest facility overall.

School system staff and consultants removed the "high enrollment" weight some schools received in the renovation queue when they put together the second version of the queue. The move hurt West Springfield, which is slightly over-capacity and benefited some other buildings the school system asserts have more structural problems, but lower enrollment.

Tistadt and most School Board members agreed that enrollment should not have as big of an impact on the renovation queue as it appeared to under the first formula. Some worried that schools with serious infrastructure concerns could lose out on funding to other facilities that were in better shape but had too many students.

"We really do have schools that have serious infrastructure concerns, where their electrical systems can't run computers and things like that," said Wilson.

Given that West Springfield still ranked as the second neediest high school in the queue, Hawkins said he was not concerned about the drop in rankings. "The need for a renovation is still the same at West Springfield High School," he said.

Bulova Enters Board Chairman's Race

"Basically, she was the budget chair that got us into a lot of this mess. I don't think the county can afford three more years of the same," he said.

Fairfax should have been better prepared for an economic downturn, particularly the slowing down of the real estate market, said Herrity, who joined the board in January. Though Herrity is in his first year on the county board, he brings name recognition to the race. His father, Jack Herrity, served 16 years on the Board of Supervisors, including 12 years as chairman.

Residents' home values have more than doubled, resulting in significantly higher taxes and more revenue for county government. Supervisors should have been more conservative about spending the additional money and adding new county programs, said Herrity.

The Springfield District supervisor also implied that Bulova and Connolly had not focused new revenue on the county's most critical needs. As the local economy boomed, traffic got worse and the locality, which is looking at cutting public safety funding, saw a spike in crime this year, he said.

In his short time on the board, Herrity has also been an advocate for more community involvement in Fairfax's budget process and supported the board's decision to conduct community dialogues about county budget priorities this fall.

"[In recent years], we haven't had outside input into the budget process other than public hearings," said Herrity.

BULOVA said she, Connolly and the other veterans on the board couldn't be blamed for the county's current financial problems.

"This is a worldwide economic downturn and Fairfax County is affected by it. I have done a very good job of steering the county through tough fiscal times before and I will again. Tom Davis was chairman of the board the last time we were affected by a recession and it certainly wasn't Tom's fault," she said.

> "I don't think the county can afford three more years of the same."
> — Supervisor Patrick Herrity (R-Springfield)

Many of Bulova's Democratic colleagues have already expressed support for her and said her experience as budget chairman would be a valuable asset.

"The main reason I am backing Sharon is we need someone who understands the budget backwards and forwards. There will be tough decisions and we need someone understands the ramifications of those tough decisions," said Supervisor Jeff McKay (D-Lee).

Others, mostly Republicans, have already come out for Herrity, even though he has not yet declared his candidacy yet.

"Sharon was chairman of the budget committee last year when they put off a lot of their decisions. They didn't do what they might have done because Gerry was running for congress. They didn't make any of the tough decisions," said Davis.

Herrity could face an uphill battle getting elected countywide as a Republican.

Fairfax has not had a Republican chairman since Davis left office 13 years ago, and all but two of the nine district supervisors are Democrats. Michael Frey (Sully) is the only other Republican on the board.

The Nov. 4 election also wasn't encouraging. Sixty percent of Fairfax County voters chose President-elect Barack Obama, giving the Democrat over a 100,000-ballot victory over Republican John McCain in the locality.

Bulova also has a track record of getting elected as a Democrat in one of the county's more moderate-to-conservative magisterial districts, said Scott Surovell, head of the Fairfax County Democratic Committee.

"Sharon has a long history of getting things done and the Braddock District voters have confirmed that five times now. She has held that seat for 21 years, which says a lot about her ability," said Surovell.

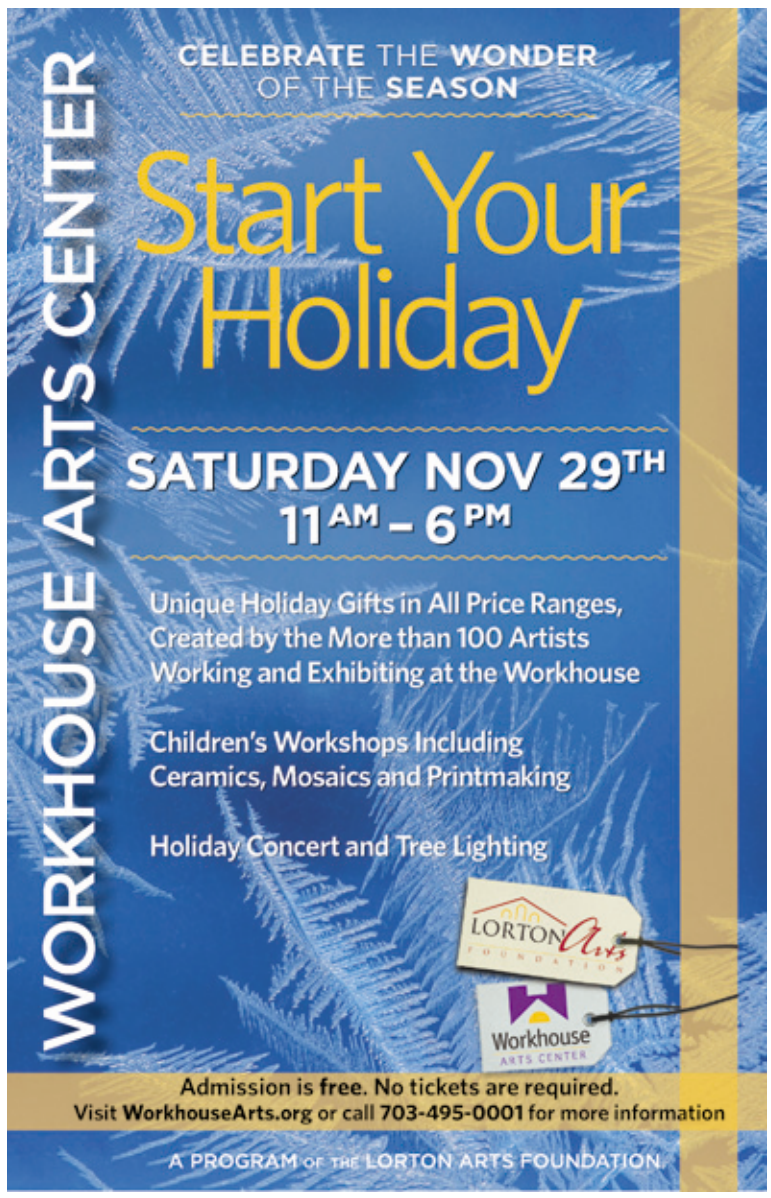
But Davis pointed out that his successor, Kate Hanley, won the county chairman seat in a similar, unfavorable climate for the Democrats in 1995.

Davis, who was then chairman, was one of over 50 Republicans to win new seats in the U.S. House of Representatives in 1994. His move to Congress triggered a special election for county chairman in an era when Republicans had the advantage, but Hanley, a Democrat, still won the countywide seat.

"This is different set of issues, different turnout model and different people from the [Nov. 4] election," he said.

In some ways, the Democratic blowout on Nov. 4 could help Herrity, according to Jim Hyland, head of the Fairfax County Republican Committee.

"I have no doubts that Republicans will be highly motivated given that election," he said.



He that fancies himself very enlightened, because he sees the deficiencies of others, may be very ignorant, because he has not studied his own.

Vick Travels a 'Long, Arduous Road'

Lee graduate C.J. Vick suffers draft day letdown but doesn't let it deter his dream.

C.J. Vick has never been flashy but developed into a menacing shot blocker and reliable shooter at Quinnipiac. 'He's more of blue collar guy,' says Mike Harris, Vick's coach at Lee.

C.J. Vick has spent his entire basketball career fighting through adversity but nothing stung quite like this. With 35-40 people assembled at Bungalow Billiards in Kingstowne last Friday night, including his parents, friends and even his kindergarten teacher, Vick and Co. were anxious to see where and when he'd be picked during the NBA D-League Draft.

But as all 160 slots were filled, the music stopped and Vick was left without a chair.

"It was awful," said Vick, a 6-foot-9 forward/center hybrid who was a three-year starter at Division I Quinnipiac University after graduating from Robert E. Lee High School in 2000. "I felt like the loneliest guy in the world for about 20 minutes because a lot of people came to support me."

Vick signed his NBA D-League contract, offered by Brandon Barnett, the NBA D-League's previous senior coordinator of basketball operations, on July 30, cementing his eligibility for the draft. A D-League contract doesn't ensure a roster spot. It only enters the player into a draft-eligible pool of players.

After the NBA D-League's pre-draft camp, which took place July 27-29 in Suwanee, Ga., Vick was ranked as the 15th-best prospect by Pro Basketball News. If a logical explanation exists for why his stock fell so fast, the Springfield native hasn't heard it.

However, the morning after what Vick likened to a prizefighter suffering a humiliating defeat, all the loneliness from the night before had dissipated. His phone rang four times on Saturday morning, each providing another opportunity to continue a professional basketball career that he had started overseas.

"I don't have time to feel sorry for myself," said Vick, who's mulling offers from teams in Austria, Portugal, Finland and Germany. "When I get to my new team, they're going to expect me to produce. They're not going to expect me to feel sorry for myself."

Vick was one of several talented players on Lee coach Mike Harris' Lancer teams of the late 1990s and early 2000s but never dazzled scouts or opposing coaches with his skills. According to Vick, he was never even a first team All-District pick.

AT QUINNIPIAC, Vick began to find his niche as a shot blocker, rebounder and an agile big man who could run the floor. Though he never earned first team All-Northeast Conference honors, Vick still holds school records for blocks (107) and games played (115).

During his senior season in 2004-05, Vick, who's fourth in school history with a .560 field-goal percentage, connected on 64.9 percent of his field-goal attempts, the second-best such mark in school history.

"He's not going to hit you with anything that's real flashy," Harris said. "If we're going to put a tag on it, I'd say he's more of blue collar guy. He could do a little bit of everything but nothing is really going to jump out at you."

> "I don't have time to feel sorry for myself."
> —C.J. Vick

Since graduating from Quinnipiac in 2005, Vick had starred for Sangalhos Desporto Clube in Portugal and Huima of the Finnish Professional League but has been training lately at Lifetime Fitness near his home in Springfield.

Vick plans to sign on with a European team shortly, and he doesn't pretend to understand the inner-workings of professional basketball in the United States.

For his own explanation, it's much simpler: Like the battle he's fought throughout his basketball career, Vick was simply overlooked. It's not something that's going to deter his lifelong dream.

"I've felt kind of marginalized throughout my career and you saw that on Friday night," Vick said. "It seems on paper that I'm a good enough player, but for some reason I've always had this long, arduous road.

"All I need is a chance, and I'll get that chance. It's not lost on the league that I was in that draft pool. I just need to get as good as I can, so when my chance comes I'll be ready."

Week in Sports

Spartans Outshoot Woodson, 72-47

West Springfield football coach Bill Renner's explanation was much simpler than the game itself.

"We did what it took to win," Renner said, following his team's 72-47 home victory over W.T. Woodson (7-4) last Friday.

With little defense in sight for this Northern Region Division 6 quarterfinal matchup, West Springfield matched Woodson point for point and eventually pulled away by scoring three straight times late in the third quarter and into the fourth.

Junior running back Dan Collins (26 carries, 351 yards, three touchdowns) scored the first and last of those three consecutive touchdowns, while senior quarterback Bryn Renner posted a 5-yard run for the second score.

"I give it up to the offensive line for giving me good blocks," said Collins of his eye-popping performance. "I'm just trying to do what I can to help the team out."

Bryn Renner, who completed 20 of his 31 passes for 274 yards and two touchdowns, also ran for 55 yards and two touchdowns on 11 carries.

With the win, West Springfield improved to 8-3 this season and will face Oakton (11-0) in Friday's semifinal matchup.

West Springfield has scored 484 points this season, an average of 44 per game and tops of any Northern Region team not named Stone Bridge (563). Oakton, on the other hand, has averaged 34.7 points per contest.

A Day for Those Who Served

Time to remember that we are still fighting two wars, many thousands have died or been wounded and our veterans deserve the best possible care on their return.

Army 1st Lt. Thomas J. Brown, a George Mason University graduate and Burke resident, died just over one month ago on Sept. 23, 2008 while serving in Iraq. His unit came under small arms fire, and Brown, 26, died from his wounds. Brown, a leader who often insisted on riding in the lead vehicles of convoys, the ones most likely to be targeted in an attack, was three weeks away from completing his tour of duty. Among family and friends left behind were his twin brother Timothy.

Nov. 11 marks Veterans Day, a day to honor all veterans, living and dead.

But our thoughts turn to the more than 4,100 U.S. service members who have died in Iraq, and more than 600 who have died in Afghanistan since 9/11. Here in Northern Virginia, many local families bear the personal sacrifice that comes with this loss.

Ami Neiberger-Miller of Sterling lost her brother, U.S. Army Specialist Christopher Neiberger, in August 2007 when he was killed by a roadside bomb while serving in Baghdad, Iraq. He was 22 years old when he died.

Many local people have responded to their loss by reaching out and helping others. Since her brother's death, Neiberger-Miller has devoted herself to the Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors (www.taps.org), which provides peer-based emotional support and other services for families of the fallen.

Scott Kirkpatrick, 26, died on Aug. 11, 2007, in Arab Jabour, Iraq. Kirkpatrick, who graduated from Park View High School in Sterling, and also considered Herndon and Reston as his hometowns, was a champion slam poet. His father, Ed Kirkpatrick, calls him the "warrior poet," and he and his wife help injured vets at Walter Reed through the Yellow Ribbon fund (www.yellowribbonfund.org).

Beth and Michael Belle of Vienna are mother and stepfather of U.S. Marine Lance Cpl. Nicholas Kirven, who, at age 21, was killed in Afghanistan in 2005 during a firefight in a cave with insurgents. He enlisted while still in high school after 9/11. Beth Belle was notified that her son had died on Mother's Day.

Xiomara Mena and Rafael Anderson of Vienna are mother and brother of U.S. Army Cpl. Andy Anderson, age 24, who was killed by enemy fire during combat operations in Iraq. Xiomara Mena is described as the unofficial "mayor" of the section of Arlington National Cemetery where her son is buried; she is at the cemetery every day.

More than 30,000 soldiers have been wounded in Iraq and Afghanistan. More than a million soldiers have served in Iraq and Afghanistan in that time, with their lives forever changed by that experience.

Editorial

Those serving are there because of their sense of duty to the rest of us, to put their lives on the line to defend the country. They join more than 24 million men and women, veterans, who have made great sacrifice in serving in the military.

A good place to start in showing respect for those now serving would be to provide them with the equipment and services they need while they are there, and the services they will need when they get home, including impeccable, first class health care.

HERE ARE the names of some of the local men and women who have died in Iraq and Afghanistan. We repeat these names several times a year to honor their service and to keep their memories in our consciousness.

If you know of someone who should be included in this list, or if you would like to share how you are honoring the memory of a family member or friend lost, or about the progress of someone injured, please let us know.

On Veterans Day we also honor those who served in World War I (a dwindling number), World War II, Korea and Vietnam, as well as those who have served the nation in times of peace.

If you have a story you'd like to share, about your own military service or that of a family member, we'd like to hear from you.
