Living with Uncertainty in West End

City Council to consider plan to demolish hundreds of low-end garden apartments.

BY MICHAEL LEE POPE
GAZETTE PACKET

On the windswept streets of the city's West End, many poor and Latino residents say they are living with a sense of uncertainty. City leaders are considering a plan that would demolish 2,500 units of low-end garden apartments and construct 6,500 units of luxury housing. Supporters of the plan say the plan includes 800 units of dedicated affordable housing, but residents who live here now say they don't know what will happen.

"We might move in with local relatives in Fairfax, but it's totally unknown to us right now," said Rodolfo Navorio, a senior at T.C. Williams High School. "I try not to let it bother me, personally, but when the time comes, I'll have to deal with it."

This week, members of the Alexandria Planning Commission approved the upzoning, although they added an amendment that City Council members will consider when they vote on the issue later this month. Instead of delivering the units slowly over a 20-year period, new member Derek Hyra suggested that all 800 of the dedicated units be delivered in the first decade of redevelopment — a way he says would minimize displacement of the thousands of families who live there now.

"We don't want the old urban renewal," said Hyra. "We want this to be considered new urban renewal."

CRITICS OF THE PLAN wore pajamas to the Planning Commission hearing Tuesday night, an indication they were willing to stay as long as necessary to advocate for the families who live there now. They were right that it was going to be a long night, with a vote that took place after midnight. Speaker after speaker said city officials should delay the plan until more accommodations could be made for the thousands of families who are now living with uncertainty.

"We don't want the old urban renewal. We want this to be considered new urban renewal."

— Derek Hyra

"Let's show them that we heard them," said Planning Commission member Mary Lyman. "And that we are at least trying to come up with some ideas to make it better."

The Price of Administration

School system's central office has 27 administrators who earn a total of $3.6 million a year.

BY MICHAEL LEE POPE
GAZETTE PACKET

In the classic Depression era tune "Nice Work if You Can Get It," Ira Gershwin describes "a man who only lives for making money" as one who "lives a life that isn't necessarily sunny." Here in Alexandria, the sun is not always shining on the Alexandria Public Schools central administration headquarters on Beauregard Street. But it is raining cash — $3.6 million this year for 27 administrators who oversee a system with 13,000 students.

"My concern is we have more administrators than we have principals in the elementary schools," said School Board member Pat Hennig. "We need to take a look to see if all of these people are needed and if there is a duplication of effort."

Information about salaries is difficult to get. School officials would not share the information without first receiving a formal Freedom of Information Act request. And School Board member Ronnie Campbell says elected officials even have a hard time getting the numbers.

"It's very frustrating," said Campbell. "These salaries come from taxpayers, so people in the community shouldn't have to file a FOIA to get it."

SALARIES FROM NEIGHBORING

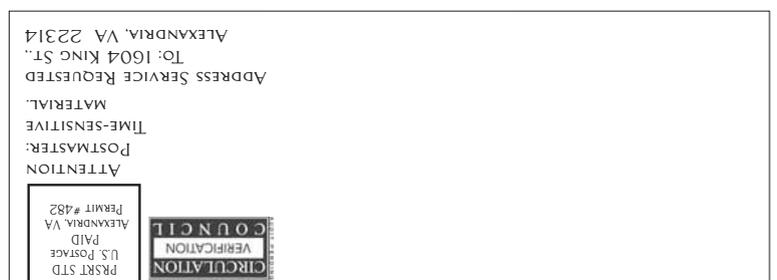

jurisdictions show that Alexandria is not out of line with other jurisdictions. Superintendents in the region, for example, tend to make anywhere from $250,000 to $300,000. So Superintendent Morton Sherman's salary of $265,000 falls well within the norm, according to industry groups that track salary data. Even when you look at national data, Alexandria's salaries do not stand out as particularly high.

"Alexandria is not out of line with other jurisdictions across the country. If anything, the city seems to be on the lean side."

— Daniel Domenech, executive director, American Association of School Administrators

"Alexandria is not out of line with other jurisdictions across the country," said Daniel Domenech, executive director of the American Association of School Administrators.

Amending the Minutes

What would happen if an alien species landed on a barren and deserted Alexandria a millennia from now? Would they be able to make sense out of the waterfront plan? Vice Mayor Allison Silberberg is not so sure.

At issue is the minutes of the Feb. 23 City Council meeting. During the meeting, she introduced a series of letters critical of the controversial rezoning plan, which would almost triple density at three sites compared to what's there now. The letters were from the National Trust for Historic Preservation, longtime state Sen. Patsy Ticer (D-30) and legendary folk singer Pete Seeger. Silberberg also suggested that council member should consider allowing only one hotel instead of two.

None of that is reflected in the official minutes of the meeting.

Instead, this is what future generations will see: "Vice Mayor Silberberg submitted letters from the community regarding the waterfront issue and stated that she is seeking a compromise for the community on the waterfront plan." The vice mayor says she doesn't believe that sentence captures the essence of what happened during the meeting. But when she tried to add some detail to the minutes, none of her colleagues on the council were willing to support the change.

"People should know the minutes of this meeting are not historically accurate," said Silberberg, who is still frustrated by the lack of detail in the official record. "I just think that's a basic democratic value that the minutes reflect what happened."

HOT Issue

Residents on the West End are not breathing easy this week, and many are organizing a protest this weekend to draw attention to construction of an Interstate ramp that many say will be an environmental hazard. At issue is a ramp from the High Occupancy Toll lanes from Shirley Memorial Highway at Turkeycock Run. "The ramp will raise pollution levels well above safe exposure standards for more than 75,000 local residents," wrote West End resident Mary Hasty in a letter to her neighbors this week. "An independent analysis reveals the ramp will spike area pollution for miles around, affecting over 75,000 residents."

A coalition of homeowner associations known as Concerned Residents of Landmark is sponsoring the demonstration, which is set to begin at 10 a.m. Saturday morning. The rally will take place at the construction site for the HOT lanes terminus at the Stevenson Avenue cul-de-sac.

Appreciating Potomac Yard

This year, city officials plan to spend about $2 million for the Potomac Yard Metro station — a $273 million station that city taxpayers will pay for in the coming decades. The location hasn't even been determined yet, and most of Potomac Yard remains raw land or longstanding retail property. In the future, city officials are planning a financial model that will set aside appreciation on the real estate to fund service delivery in the newly created neighborhood.

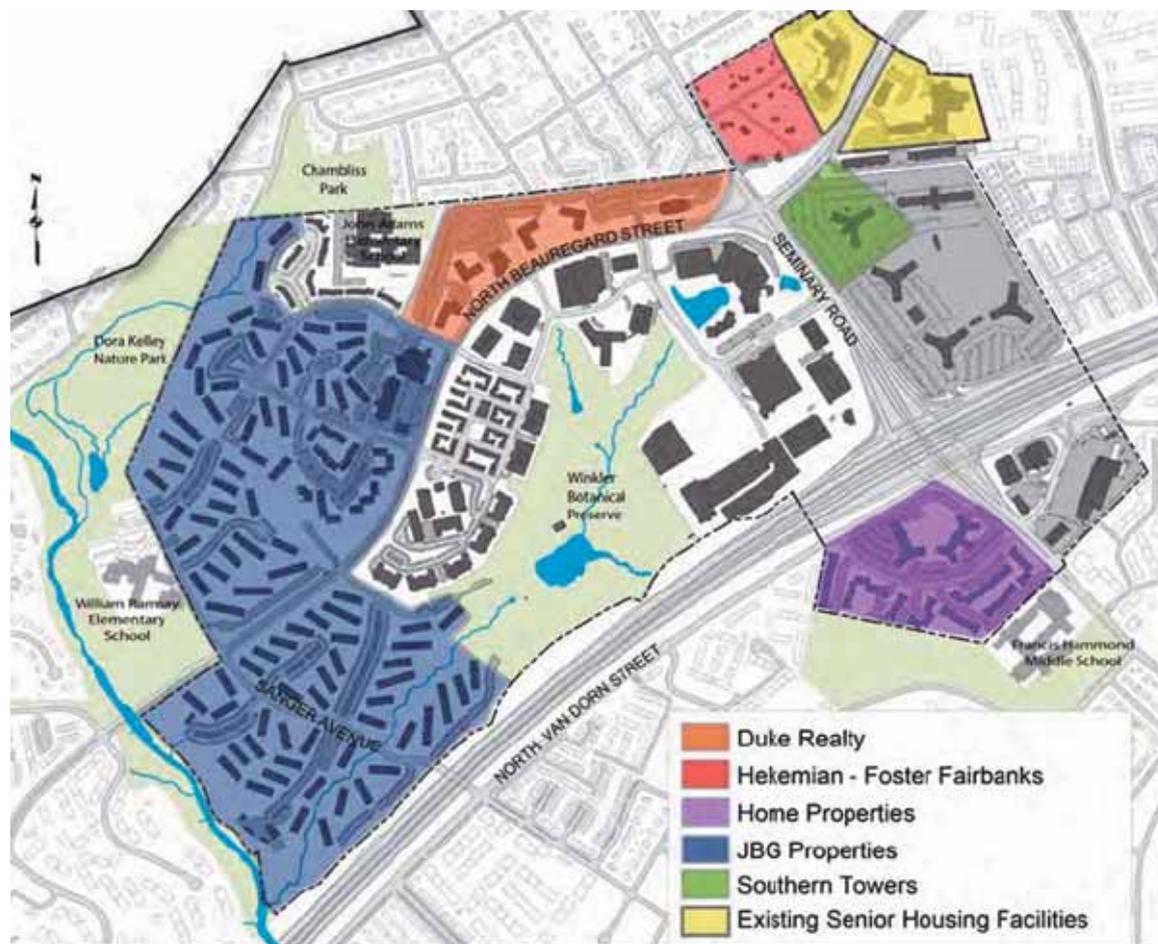

"With development at Potomac Yard now accelerating, and with the timing of potential station construction drawing nearer, the fine tuning of the revenue calculation model will occur over the next year," wrote Budget Director Nelsie Smith in a budget memo last week.

Part of that fine tuning will be the creation of a model to differentiate between kinds of properties. Single-family detached homes will be taxed at a different rate than townhouses, for example, or mid-rise residential properties. Budget officials say the reason for that is residents of these buildings will demand different kinds of services as taxpayers. "Making a distinction will be important as Alexandria City Public Schools costs are the biggest driver of the cost of serving residential properties," Smith said. "And there are major differences in student generation among different types of residential property."

Currently, the station is in the Environmental Impact Statement Study phase — a process that city budget officials have set aside $2 million for this year. Three alternative designs are currently under consideration, ranging in cost from $194 million to $459 million. City Council members are expected to make a decision on the design and location this year.

ALEXANDRIA DEPARTMENT OF PLANNING AND ZONING

But when Hyra suggested that commissioners consider adding 100 additional units of affordable housing, a majority of the members rejected the idea. They said that the small-area plan had already been considered and adopted, including a carefully balanced financial plan for how the affordable units would be financed.

"It's not that I didn't hear them, and my heart strings were tugged at," said Planning Commission member Eric Wagner. "But there is no other plan that we've developed that puts this kind of money for affordable housing."

THE ZONING PLAN now before City Council members includes $167 million for affordable housing, a feature that supporters say makes the Beauregard plan a historic addition to the supply of dedicated units in the region. About $52 million of that will come from developer contributions, with the rest coming from tax-increment funding. Planning Commission members said that if they failed to approve the deal, those units would not be available and market forces would displace residents.

"If we don't act," explained chairman John Komoroske, "we lose those units."

Many residents who live in the apartments now say the promise of 800 units in the future is small consolation for people who live in 2,500 units today. They worry that they might not be one of the lucky few who gets selected to live in the units, which will be a fraction of the market-rate affordable housing units there today. Many residents say the stress of an uncertain future lingers over their days, a phenomenon that several suggested that City Council members consider as they take up the issue

"Let the stress kick in of having to find a place to live, of relocating their kids, of having a longer commute to work," said Alex Santiago, who has three children in the public school system. "Have them stress about it as much as me and my family are stressing about it."

CITY OFFICIALS say the redevelopment will unfold in phases over three decades, a long-term plan that includes a new town center and a transit corridor. Developers expect to break ground in 2014, when the first phase of demolition and construction will begin. The deal now under consideration would have developers contribute $52 million for affordable housing, $28 million for a traffic ellipse, $23 million for a transitway, $18 million for donated land and $10 million for a fire station. An attorney representing developer JBG said the phasing plan will allow many of the families to stay where they are during the construction.

"There will be many, many apartments that remain in place over time," said Kathy Puskar, a land-use attorney who represents the developers interested in redeveloping the properties. "So the first phase is not tearing down all 2,500 units."

The original plan called for the first 47 units of dedicated affordable housing to be delivered in 2014, with half of the units more than a decade away. Now that Planning Commission members have suggested an accelerated timetable, those units may be available sooner if City Council members agree. Until then, many of the residents of this working class neighborhood say they want to find a way to stay in a neighborhood they have come to call home

"I feel very sad because I live for 16 years here," said Milagros Navorio. "I want to stay here for my family."

"I try not to let it bother me, personally, but when the time comes, I'll have to deal with it."

tors. "If anything, the city seems to be on the lean side."

Domenech said that when you look at the ratio of administrators per pupil, Alexandria has fewer officials than other jurisdictions of its size. And the average deputy superintendent in Northern Virginia makes about $180,000, according to Domenech. So Deputy Superintendent Madye Henson's annual salary of $177,000 is below the regional average. He said that when city residents look at salaries of central administrators, they need to remember that these are highly educated people in high demand, and that the marketplace of talent works the same way in public sector as it does in the private sector. "If people were to look at a similar list of salaries for people in the private sector, they would seem to be all right," said Domenech, a former superintendent in the Fairfax County public school system. "But somehow in the public sector, it's almost as if these people have taken a vow of poverty, and they have not."

THE GERSHWIN TUNE also laments "a man who works for fame" because "there's no guarantee that time won't erase his name." So far, Superintendent Sherman's name has been thoroughly etched into the memory of people in Alexandria and throughout the region. Last year, then-Vice Mayor Kerry Donley called for Sherman to resign after a financial scandal was uncovered in the school system's budget office. Instead of stepping down, the superintendent brought a new team of administrators on board and persuaded School Board members to let him stay for the remainder of his contract, which expires in the summer of 2015.

"I think there would be a comfort level across the city with what we are spending if we had better results," said School Board member Bill Campbell. "So don't tell me there's no room in this budget for adjustments."

One potential cut under consideration would remove three positions from central staff to save $425,000 a year.

"As a board, we are analyzing all of the administrator salaries as we go through the budget process," said School Board Chairwoman Karen Graf in an emailed response to questions. "I think there will be some critical analysis that might bring about some more effective streamlining of the organizational chart."

ADMINISTRATOR SALARIES in Alexandria tend to be about twice as much as the average teacher salary which is $73,000. School officials say part of the reason for the cost of administration is the challenge of working in a system where 56 percent of students qualify for free or reduced price lunch, an indication that most of the public school students in the city live in poverty. That's one of the reasons why the cost-per-pupil in Alexandria is $17,618, one of the highest in the region. Educational leaders in Northern Virginia say attracting talent to this region is difficult because the cost of living here is so high.

"Obviously people are most familiar with teachers and principals," said Phil Kavits, communications director with Prince William County public school system. "But they may not be familiar with all the people who are necessary to make sure we get students to school, that we keep them safe while they are there, that we deal with the myriad mandates from the state and local level and that we effectively communicate with parents and other constituents."

On Tuesday April 9, Ben & Jerry's across the nation will host its annual Free Cone Day. From noon to 8 p.m. at the Old Town Ben & Jerry's located at 103 South Union St., Carpenter's Shelter will be collecting donations. All proceeds further Carpenter's Shelter's work in the community, serving homeless and formerly homeless men, women and children. The ice cream is free but all donations benefit Carpenter's Shelter.

From 4-6 p.m., guest scoopers will be dishing out ice cream alongside the Carpenter's staff. Guests will include: U.S. Rep. Jim Moran, Kerry Donley, David Speck and Sheriff Dana Lawhorne.

Donate Dresses for 'Princess for a Night'

The eighth annual Princess for a Night project is collecting dry-cleaned formal dresses, shoes, handbags, jewelry, unused makeup (for example, sample cosmetics), and shopping bags now through Friday, May 11.

Donations can be dropped off at the T.C. Williams High School's Main Office, 3330 King St., Monday through Friday between 7:30 a.m. and 4 p.m.

For the past seven years, the community has helped young women across the region to attend prom without major expense. In April, dresses and other prom essentials are collected at various drop-off points throughout the area. Then, in April and May, events are held at T.C. Williams High School and two other local high schools, where the students can select dresses, shoes, handbags and jewelry free of charge. Last year, more than 500 dresses (as well as shoes, jewelry, and handbags) were donated; more than 325 students from 11 high schools attended.

The project especially needs dresses for full-figured young women (sizes 18+). Do not donate velvet or wintry dresses, soiled items, outdated items, casual dresses or items for mature women, as they cannot be used.

Dress selection will take place at T.C. Williams on Friday, April 27, from 3:30 to 6 p.m., and Saturday, April 28, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Enter through the Chinquapin Drive entrance and follow the signs. Students will be served on a first-come, first-served basis.

To assist with the project, e-mail Eleanor Muse, eleanor.muse@acps.k12.va.us.

Del Ray Variety Store Opens

After months of canvassing neighbors and businesses in Del Ray, the Del Ray Variety Store held a grand opening on Saturday morning, March 30. The canvassing was the brainchild of the owners — to find out what the neighborhood lacks in goods and supplies. The focus is on fun and convenience, something for everyone to enjoy: children's toys, arts and crafts, pet products, helium balloons, greeting cards, hardware, and party supplies. Also in the inventory are office and school supplies, beauty products, bath and kitchen products, and general home merchandise and candy. The store is independently owned by Jennifer and Erik Dorn.

Free parking is available for 21 cars next to the store at 203 E. Del Ray Avenue.

Sunna and Ray Mahmood, Mayor Bill Euille and Del Ray Variety Store owners Jennifer and Erik Dorn take a moment from the grand opening festivities and the new variety store in Del Ray.

Phoebe, Mein, Olivia and Claire tour the parking lot with gift balloons during the grand opening celebration on Saturday morning.

LIVING LEGENDS

Lord and Brown Help Shape This City

They share artistic vision and volunteer spirit.

BY CHUCK HAGEE

One is an accomplished architect, the other an award-winning photographic artist. Together Marlin G. Lord and Kathryn A. Brown transform the world around them and give tangible evidence to the philosophy of Johann Friedrich von Schiller: "He who has done the best for his own time has lived for all times."

Lord brought his Midwestern values, sense of community and can-do attitude with him when he came to the Del Ray section of Alexandria 47 years ago from Minneapolis to join the architectural firm of Vosbeck, Vosbeck, Kendrick and Redinger (VVKR). Today the results are evident, not only in structural form, but also in his ongoing activities and civic and philanthropic actions citywide.

Brown was born in Hato Rey, Puerto Rico, grew up in Westfield, N.J., and graduated from Pennsylvania State University with a bachelor of arts degree emphasizing fine art, architecture, art education and history. Twelve years later, after working for several firms as an architectural draftsman, and a sojourn in California, she decided her first love was photography. However, it was her architectural drafting capabilities that brought her in contact with Lord. She applied for a job at VVKR. Lord, then a vice president of the firm, recommended that she be hired.

"We came upon one another in the stairwell of the building after she was hired and I said that I was the one who had recommended her," Lord said. That was in 1979. It was the beginning of an alliance that has benefitted Alexandria and its residents for more than 33 years.

In addition to being founding members of the Del Ray Artisans (DRA), a nonprofit organization with the mission of promoting art and community, Brown's and Lord's other joint civic endeavors include the King Street Gardens Park Foundation and Chinquapin Organic Gardens. They also work together at Lord's architecture firm, Marlin G. Lord AIA Architect. Lord is the company's principle architect and Brown is the draftsman. They share design responsibilities. They also support each other's photographic art and submit their work to exhibitions throughout the metropolitan area.

A MINNESOTA NATIVE, Lord earned architectural degrees from the University of Minnesota in 1960 and 1962. His architectural designs in Northern Virginia include the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics headquarters in Reston, the Thomas Jefferson Elementary School in Falls Church and the restaurants Los Tios Grill on Mount Vernon Avenue and Dos Amigos on Braddock Road.

Perhaps Lord's greatest architectural contribution to Alexandria was his leadership on a new design for the old Monroe Avenue Bridge. The straightening and redesign of the bridge resulted in safer and more efficient traffic flow on Jefferson Davis Highway, improved the Potomac Yard land-use plan, expanded parkland at Simpson Field and led to the revitalization of Mount Vernon Avenue as a safe and thriving commercial and residential primary artery through Del Ray.

In 1983 Brown left VVKR to establish her own commercial photography firm concentrating on events, products, public relations and architecture. She received an A.A.S. degree in commercial photography from Northern Virginia Community College in 1988. She continues to provide drafting service to Lord's architectural firm. "Photography is both a vocation and avocation for me. As a full-time, self-employed commercial photographer I strive daily to provide visually stimulating images to fulfill my clients' needs. As a fine art photographer I strive to balance the pressure of deadlines with the release of the creative process," Brown said.

Brown has served as vice president of internal affairs and grant chair for Artisans United, Inc. in Annandale, and is a legacy member of The Art League in Alexandria. She has served as treasurer and newsletter editor of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Fairfax County and is a member of the Del Ray Business Association, the Del Ray Citizens Association and Agenda:Alexandria. She served a term on the visual arts panel of the Alexandria Commission for the Arts. She was a member of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce cultural arts committee from 1991 until the committee was disbanded and in 1992 became the Alexandria Arts Forum, a coalition of artists and arts patrons, advocates and administrators. Brown helped found the forum and for 18 years has served in multiple positions on its board.

One of Brown's most recognized ventures was cutting and donating her long hair to Locks of Love, an organization that collects human hair to make wigs for children who suffer from diseases that cause their hair to fall out. "It was recommended for me to do this by my fellow DRA members," Brown said. Her hair had not been cut since she was in the eighth grade. It had reached nearly to her knees before her first donation of 17 inches in 2009 to Locks of Love. She repeated the donation in 2012 with a donation of another 17 inches. Her donations were leveraged to raise funds for the Ted Eichers Memorial Art Scholarship, which awards $1,000 annually to a T.C. Williams High School senior. "I was amazed by the depth of the warmth and generosity that I found as I spoke with fellow Alexandrians," she said. "In the end we were able to donate $800 to the fund."

AS FOUNDING MEMBERS of Alexandria's Urban Design Task Force, Brown and Lord fostered an international design competition for King Street Gardens Park, located at the intersection of King Street and Daingerfield and Diagonal Roads. The project was the recipient of many grants, which helped lead to its creation. It was also funded in part by the Buy a Brick, Build a Park campaign, spearheaded by Lord and Brown, serving as volunteers.

"There was a fair amount of controversy and even a proposal by some to have it torn down. But supporters of the project threatened to chain themselves to it if any attempt was made to dismantle it," Lord said. The park now hosts Wednesday farmers markets from May through October and an annual Supper Under the Stars organized by the Old Town Business and Professional Association.

For 20 years Lord served as a member of the Alexandria Park and Recreation Commission, including seven years as chair. Over the years Lord has also answered the Alexandria City Council's call to serve on the Waterfront Committee, the Alexandria 2020 Ad Hoc Committee, the Washington Area Council of Governments citizen land-use advisory committee and the Upper Potomac West Task Force, to mention a few. He is a former president of the Del Ray Citizens Association and a recipient of the Del Ray Business Association's Star Award.

Lord is also an award-winning photographer in his own right. "He won an award for his photography in the first show he ever entered," Brown said.

Together, Lord and Brown have not only changed the face of Del Ray but also have been instrumental movers and shakers in many activities and projects that have improved the City of Alexandria and the lives of its residents.

Virginia's current Poet Laureate, Sofia M. Starnes, has launched The Nearest Poem Anthology project, which will collect 50-100 poems submitted by Virginia residents "that are most meaningful to us and thus create a testimony to the immediacy of poetry and its closeness to everyday life." Submissions will be accepted through June, and should include the full text of the poem, the name of the poet and the source, including where you encountered the poem, and 200-250 words of persuasive explanation of why you selected the poem. "This should include some information about yourself and why you consider your selected poem 'nearest' to you," Starnes writes. Governing Behind Closed Doors

To the Editor:

On March 16, the Alexandria City Council passed controversial and sweeping planning changes that are already the subject of litigation. The city passed these changes to transform an honest policy disagreement into Through the Looking Glass litigation tactics, where nothing is as it appears to be. There are two cases in court.

The first, city-initiated litigation attacks a Board of Zoning Appeals (BZA) decision finding that citizens have a right to petition their government in accordance with state law (the BZA is a creature of state law, not the city) and zoning ordinance. The second, citizen-initiated litigation, which is before

Protecting the Antibiotic Arsenal

BY CHRISTINE CANDIO, RN, FACHE
CEO, INOVA ALEXANDRIA HOSPITAL

Since the discovery of penicillin by Alexander Fleming in 1928, antibiotics have served an essential role in helping the body's immune system fight infections caused by bacteria. They are prescribed to treat myriad illnesses like pneumonia, strep throat, and urinary tract infections. Sometimes, however, antibiotics are prescribed for illnesses they cannot treat — those caused by viruses — like colds and flu, or they are prescribed too often. This misuse has given rise to drug-resistant pathogens and compromised the efficacy of our limited antibiotic options.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recently highlighted the dire consequences of antibiotic misuse and overuse in a report about the ever-increasing problem of "nightmare superbugs." Known by an alphabet soup of letters like CRE, MRSA and VRE, these germs are becoming increasingly resistant to many if not all classes of antibiotics and are creating healthcare headaches in hospitals and nursing homes worldwide. For patients, this can mean extended hospital stays, longer lasting illnesses, even more medicines with negative side-effects, or in extreme cases, death. Now, the CDC is urging hospitals, healthcare providers, and patients to act immediately to protect our antibiotic arsenal before it's too late.

At Inova Alexandria Hospital, I am proud to say, we are part of the solution to this global patient safety concern. In 2010, we developed an Antimicrobial Stewardship Program to optimize our use of anti-otics and provide better quality care for our patients. With a multidisciplinary team of infectious disease physicians, critical care intensivists, pharmacists, microbiologists, nurses, and clinical specialists, we created a new care model that has achieved successful results.

The hallmark of the model includes daily rounds on all patients undergoing antimicrobial therapy (antibiotics and anti-fungals) in our Intensive Care Units, as well as those on high risk or extended antibiotics in all inpatient units. In consultation with the patient's attending physician, the team follows these patients throughout their hospital stay, closely monitoring their medications, therapies, and lab results. They ensure that every patient prescribed an antibiotic actually needs such therapy and that they receive the correct drug at the right dose via the right route for the right amount of time.

To effect change, team members educated staff about the need for judicious use of antibiotics and introduced best practices in antimicrobial stewardship, which sometimes ran contrary to traditional patterns of therapy. With help from the hospital's physician leaders, the team overcame these conflicts and improved patient safety in the process. In the first full year of our Antimicrobial Stewardship Program, we significantly decreased the number of days ICU patients received antibiotics, as well as associated hospital costs; we also saw a decrease in patients' hospital stays and patient deaths.

Buoyed by the successful results in our ICUs, we have expanded the Antimicrobial Stewardship Program hospital-wide and will look for other opportunities throughout Inova.

the Supreme Court of Virginia, is whether the city can manipulate the process to deprive its citizens of due process of law. The city repeated its manipulation of the process in March, which likely will lead to more litigation. Yet City Council passed both new changes after only three weeks of total process, and there was scant discussion of the implications of these changes. It was so scant there was no discussion.

As background, the decision to initiate the changes was made in an executive session of council, in apparent violation of transparency laws. Citizens, of course, have no idea who was present, what was said or by whom, or who voted for what. What we do know is that the city held a press conference a few days later announcing that it had decided in closed session to enact these changes to “get beyond the litigation.”

Not much was spoken about whether either text amendment was a good idea. Indeed, the city blocked release of the text amendments until 10 days before the Planning Commission hearing. It is a common and sound litigation strategy to withhold information until required to reveal it. As public policy, withholding information relevant to a public matter is atrocious government (and gives the lie to the What’s Next effort). Obviously, the city recognized a conflict between governing and litigating, and chose litigating as the priority.

Although the March 5 Planning Commission hearing and March 16 council hearing were entertaining as Kabuki theater, it was nothing more. Multiple witnesses testified against the changes and some testified for it. Yet no one on the Planning Commission or council could discuss the real reason the changes were introduced in the first place: to advance the litigation interests.

One of the changes curtails the due process rights of property owners to petition its government. The Planning Commission (like the BZA last year) raised many questions about the implications of this reform, none of which were answered at council. So now they want a working group to figure out what the new provision means? Why would council pass changes that it does not understand? The city attorney implied the changes are necessary to improve the city’s posture in court. Little was said about the underlying meaning. In English, the city railroaded through changes it does not understand because litigators told them to. Why? The city of course could not discuss or disclose the rationale behind adoption of public policy (on the advice of counsel?) because that would apparently betray litigation strategy. So they remained silent during testimony and enacted sweeping changes with little discussion or understanding.

It is unfortunate that we are now in a place where decisions are not made in public for policy reasons but made behind closed doors, cloaked in secrecy, for the purpose of advancing narrow litigation interests.

It may work; it may not; it may trigger more litigation. The Supreme Court of Virginia and the Circuit Court will tell us soon enough. But we should not be under any illusion that the March 16 changes were done for any other reason than positioning the city and certain developers in court. Having passed the law, we will have to wait to find out what’s in it. In other words, government of the litigators, by the litigators, and for the litigators.

SCHOOLS

Email announcements to gazette@connectionnewspapers.com. Deadline is Thursday at noon. Photos are welcome.

Cora Kelly School for Math, Science and Technology held a drive to collect toys and "A Coat for Every Kindergartener." The school partnered with the Drug Enforcement Agency, an organization with a mission to keep young children's minds and bodies healthy. The event fit into the kindergartners' social studies unit, during which students learned about needs versus wants, and talked about viewing coats as a type of "shelter," one of the three needs of living things. Collected gifts, clothing and food went to 130 students.

Alexandria City Public Schools is the recipient of a $380,771 federal grant from the Health Resources and Services Administration, a division of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The funding will help ACPS start a mobile health unit that will provide primary health, basic dental and mental health services to students in the William Ramsay, John Adams and Patrick Henry elementary school communities.

William Ramsay, Patrick Henry and John Adams serve a combined 2,235 students. Of John Adams's 820 students, about 65 percent are economically disadvantaged, 17 percent are students with disabilities and 33 percent are English language learners. Seventy-five percent of Patrick Henry's 586 students are economically disadvantaged, 10 percent are students with disabilities and 34 percent are learning English. Ramsay serves 829 students, 86 percent of whom are economically disadvantaged.

Joined by members of the Key and Keydette Clubs from T.C. Williams High School, CFNC pre-schoolers and their families participated in interactive experiments that encouraged exploration, discovery and basic science concepts. As a finale, children watched as their own version of a volcano erupted.

CFNC provides free and fully accredited preschool education for 200 children living in poverty in Northern Virginia. The organization also provides free family support, literacy, job training and health programs to the parents of its students. For more information, visit www.cfnc-online.org.

From T.C. Williams Dropout to Ph.D.

Injured from an accident with heavy machinery and left with a broken back, Roderic Brame went back to school. He was admitted to Radford University where he completed a B.S in geology and a M.S. in science education. Brame continued and pursued and was awarded a Ph.D. in geological sciences from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. He has not ever received a high school diploma after dropping out of T.C. Williams. Brame dropped in again after attaining his doctorate and for three years taught the ESL students Earth Science. Today Brame is an instructor of science at Academy at the Lakes View in West Florida.

Brame returned to Alexandria over spring break with his wife Rachel to visit friends and promote his new book, "The Mighty Titans."

While Brame was at T.C. Williams, he taught 341 students; 184 of those students are still in contact with him through facebook and email. Nineteen of those students contributed their perspectives on learning to the book. They included: Sharmin Ahktar, Tynita Butts, Wendy Diaz, Esteban Enriquez, Mavis Gandayi, Brice Gibson, Yonathan Kassaye, Hanna Mangold, Aynun Nahar, Fatima Sivirian, Oscar Vasquez, Habiba Ashna, Yancy Collins, Kate Doniger, Diana Espinosa Newman, Citina Getachew, Maria Henry, Ahmed Khalil Ph.D., Almas Mendygaliyev, Sonia Paniagua and Tracy Twumasi.

Saints extend winning streak to 25 games dating back to 2012.

BY JON ROETMAN
GAZETTE PACKET

With seven state championships, more than 20 league titles and a head coach with more than 600 career victories, there isn't much left for the St. Stephen's & St. Agnes girls' lacrosse program to accomplish.

On Monday, however, this group of Saints faced a challenge they had yet to conquer. St. Stephen's hosted Baltimore's Bryn Mawr, having lost to the Mawrtians each of the last three seasons. While head coach Kathy Jenkins said the Saints only discussed how to improve from last season's loss to Bryn Mawr, senior Carly Reed, the Saints' all-time leading scorer, had all three losses on her mind.

"That's what I thought about the most is how we lost the past three years," Reed said after the game. "I always knew we could beat them — last year we lost by one. We knew we had it in us and this year is [the seniors'] last year, so we knew we had to win."

The Saints ended the losing streak in convincing fashion, beating Bryn Mawr 15-3 on April 1 at St. Stephen's & St. Agnes School. Reed scored a game-high six goals and senior captain Margaret Tucker Fogarty finished with five.

"It's always been one of our biggest games and we really wanted to come out and beat them and I knew we could," said Fogarty, who will play at James Madison University. "I feel like today we just came out really fired up and we had a lot of confidence ..."

Last season, Bryn Mawr edged SSSAS, 14-13. "We were trying to work defensively because they were able to get around us and get good shots off last year, and I said we really need to try to take them out of that and force them back to use their left hand more," Jenkins said. "We spent time on that and I think it paid off. We know they play more of a zone [defense] and they double really well and trap, so we talked about really moving the ball and sending a cutter out and a cutter in because at that point we'll hopefully get an opening in front of the goal, and I felt like that worked, too."

Saints goalkeeper Gussie Johns finished with 12 saves. Jenkins said Johns played well during the team's recent trip to the Golden State.

"The whole time in California, the teams we played out there that were really strong; they said they thought Gussie was the difference," Jenkins said. "When they got opportunities to score, Gussie came up with big saves, so they never got any rhythm on their shooting or their attack because Gussie was so dominant in goal."

The Saints improved their record to 8-0 and extended their winning streak to 25 games, dating back to last season. St. Stephen's & St. Agnes has gone undefeated eight times in program history, the last coming in 2008.

Does the possibility of going undefeated cross the Saints' minds?

"It's more of keeping the legacy, keeping up the reputation than it is to be undefeated," said Reed, who will play for the University of North Carolina, "but being undefeated is what we're aiming for."

The Saints faced Episcopal on Wednesday, after the Gazette Packet's deadline. St. Stephen's & St. Agnes will host New Trier at 4 p.m. on Friday, April 5.

TC Frosh Girls Win At Noxontown Regatta

The T.C. Williams crew team traveled to St. Andrew's School in Middletown, Del., on Saturday for the Noxontown Regatta, a contest that saw the Titan rowers come away with a victory and two second-place finishes in their first official competition of the year.

Leading the way for T.C. Williams was the girls' freshman 8, which captured first place in its 1500m race with a time of 5:34.87, which was 13 seconds faster than the second-place boat from Walt Whitman High School.

Members of the girls' freshman 8 include coxswain Maggie Chamberlain and rowers Natasha Magallon, Harper Jensen, Amelia Bender, Giulia Pastore, Hannah Posson, Abby Prall, Sarah Scroggs and LeeAnn Richards.

Also turning in a strong performance at St. Andrew's was the T.C. Williams girls' first 8, which narrowly missed capturing first place in its race when it crossed the finish line with a time of 5:21.8, which was .9 seconds behind the winning boat from St. Andrews. Members of the TC girls' first 8 include coxswain Rosa Procaccino and rowers Gabby Salcedo, Alexandra Lemke, Nadia Magallon, Caroline Olsson, Katie Pickup, Maura Nakahata, Maeve Bradley and Kyra McClary.

The T.C. Williams boys also turned in a solid showing at St. Andrew's, with the top performance coming from members of the Varsity 4 "A" boat, who took second-place honors in its race with a time of 5:16.6, six seconds off the pace set by the winning boat from Washington-Lee and two seconds ahead of the TC varsity 4 "B" boat, which was also competing in the race. Members of the TC varsity 4 "A" boat include coxswain Spenser Gilliland and rowers Sam Zickar, Greg Montenegro, Carter Weitekamp and Ben Blakeslee.

In addition to T.C. Williams and host St. Andrews, other schools competing at the Noxontown Regatta this past weekend included Ocean City, Robinson, Walt Whitman, and Washington-Lee.

Next up for the TC crew team is an intra-squad scrimmage this Saturday, April 6, at the Dee Campbell Boathouse in Old Town. The scrimmage, which comes at the end of spring break for many schools in the region, is intended to provide the Titan rowers with one last week of competitive practice before they enter the heart of their schedule over the next 60 days.

The T.C. Williams crew team is guided by boys' head coach Pete Stramese and girls' head coach Mercedes Kiss. For more information on TC crew, visit www.tccrew.org, or follow them on Facebook at www.facebook.com/alexandria.crewbooster.com.

Researchers in George Mason University's College of Education and Human Development (CEHD) joined the Advancing Healthcare Initiatives for Underserved Students (ACHIEVES) project to offer concussion education.

Researchers Address 'Concussion Culture'

Education and proper health care are keys.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
GAZETTE PACKET

With the impending warmer weather comes an increased number of children participating in outdoor activities. Some local health care professionals and researchers are issuing words of caution.

"More children will be outside playing with friends, riding bicycles and engaging in contact sports. These activities and others where impact is a possibility place children at risk for a concussion," said Dr. Faith Claman, who holds a doctor of nursing practice and is an assistant professor in the Malek School of Health Professions at Arlington's Marymount University.

Local educators say it is important to know the facts. "A concussion is a brain injury, which often occurs as a result of a fall or blow to the head or body, said Dr. Dalila Birem, associate medical director of Molina Healthcare of Virginia and Fairfax Community Health Care Network. "Normally, the brain is cushioned by fluid, but when jolted violently, the brain crashes into the skull, resulting in damage to the soft tissue."

Birem says that while some people may lose consciousness, more common symptoms of a concussion include headache, blurred vision, fatigue or irritability. "Others may experience no symptoms at all [and] with rest, most people fully recover from a concussion," said Birem. "However, severe concussions or repeated incidents may lead to more serious consequences, such as problems with speech, mobility or learning."

Researchers at George Mason University in Fairfax are taking action. "Concussions are running rampant across the country right now and it seems that no one, from middle school student athletes to professional players, are exempt," said university spokeswoman Catherine J. Probst. "As a result, some states are enacting new laws to change this concussion culture. Virginia's General Assembly [passed legislation] that requires student athletes and their parents to receive annual concussion education. ... The law also states that schools form concussion management teams to provide and document concussion education for students, staff, coaches and parents."

Implementing the legislation presents challenges, however. "Many Virginia public schools lack the necessary resources to properly deliver concussion education," she continued.

To address the dearth of resources, researchers in Mason's College of Education and Human Development (CEHD) joined the Advancing Healthcare Initiatives for Underserved Students (ACHIEVES) project to offer effective medical care and education.

"The project has already reached more than 80,000 student athletes, staff, coaches and parents to deliver more effective medical care and concussion education," Probst said.

ACHIEVES offers services that run the gamut from implementing an electronic medical record-keeping program to offering both online and face-to-face sessions. Probst says university researchers hope the ACHIEVES project will serve as a model for other school systems at the local, regional and national levels as more states enact concussion laws.

Sharing the Joy Of Easter

To the Editor:

The beauty of giving shines brighter than one can speak of. On the behalf of the communities of the City of Alexandria, I would like to say thanks to the Alfred Street Baptist Church of Alexandria for its outpouring of love — and more than 100 Easter baskets that were given to children from age of 4 months and up.

What a simple gift of the heart and what it meant for each child, especially the smiles of joy as some of the youngest tried to carry baskets larger than themselves.

May we all share that moment through a child's eyes, to enjoy the life that's given.

Budget's Effect On Officers

To the Editor:

The following letter was addressed to the citizens of Alexandria.

I am Sean McGowan, executive director of the Virginia Police Benevolent Association. I am a retired Alexandria police officer, having served 25 years in the department. While a police officer for Alexandria, I served as the president of the Alexandria Chapter of the Police Benevolent Association.

Members of the Alexandria Chapter have expressed deep concerns over the city manager's proposed changes to the city's health insurance program and the police and fire pension. Both of these changes will have a major impact on the lives of police officers and their families. While our officers have long lagged behind our comparable jurisdictions in salary, they have always been able to point to their benefits as something that helped maintain their compensation level; this is no longer the case.

Our law enforcement professionals understand that the cost of healthcare is rising, not only here in the city, but nationwide. Over the past several years, the city has increased the portion of health insurance premiums that they pay to 20 percent, which has not been easy, but it is understandable given the trends that are outside the city's control. Our Police Department and public safety employee members are greatly concerned about the proposed changes to deductibles and the co-pay system that will not only directly impact family budgets, but may put employees in a situation where they think twice about obtaining medical care. Under the new deductible plan, a family must meet a deductible of $800 each year before benefits apply. As anyone with young children can attest, there are reoccurring trips to doctor's offices, urgent care, and even the emergency room. Before each of these trips, parents will now have to weigh whether or not they will be able to pay the hundreds of dollars in medical bills they are about to incur. This is a choice that no parent should have to make. Dealing with a sick or injured child in the middle of the night is stressful enough without having to factor in the hundreds of dollars of out of pocket costs.

There are also members of our police family who are battling cancer and other chronic diseases. Rest assured, they will reach their yearly deductible. God forbid they face complications in their treatment that results in an inpatient hospitalization; they will also face a $500 co-pay.

The facts of the matter is that police officers and their families will be required to pay $800 more a year for their health insurance on top of any premium increases that may come along. Family financial concerns will now be factored into the decision to obtain medical care. By adopting this proposal, this is the difficult financial road our officers will be on.

On top of the changes to the health insurance program, the city manager's proposed budget also calls for an additional 2 percent annual contribution to the Police & Fire pension plan. It goes without saying that these directly affect officers' gross and take home pay. Our police officers already contribute 8 percent of their salary to the plan and have for nearly 10 years. Now police officers are being asked to pay more and receive the same benefit, all the while being told that the plan is on sound footing. When the plan was enacted in 2004, they were told that the design of the plan allowed the city, rather than the participating police officers, to absorb the ups and downs of the markets and investments, but now they are being told that we must contribute more to compensate for underperforming investments. Something isn't adding up.

I cannot understate the impact of these proposals on police officers and their families. The Alexandria Human Resources Department has provided a calculator for employees to determine the impact on their paychecks. I have had the opportunity to run some figures in the calculator and found them to be troubling. A brand new police officer, with a family, who was hired this past January, is estimated to receive an $11 increase in salary for fiscal year 2014. That's not $11 a week, or $11 a paycheck, that's $11 for the entire year. It gets worse for those who have served their city honorably for years. A police detective, with a wife and child, who has been with the city for nine years, will actually see a $383 deduction in his gross pay. A 16-year veteran police officer suffers a $923 loss. This is real. These are real people who will make less money in the future. It's hard to convince a new, bright young police officer to stay with our department when they know that they will make less money — year after year. Not only will you lose the future of this department when these young officers leave, but they walk out the door with the training and know how we have given them. These police officers then go to work for another jurisdiction. The City of Alexandria has invested thousands of dollars in training in them and has nothing to show for it.

The city manager's budget includes an average 3.1 percent merit increase for employees.

For this they are thankful, because without it, the 2 percent pension increase and the rise in insurance premiums would make these losses even greater. Keep in mind that these numbers do not include the $800 deductible that I discussed earlier or the Federal Reserve's 1.5 – 2 percent increase in inflation predicted for 2014.

That makes the officer's family budget picture even bleaker.

There is not a police officer in this city who took their job to become rich. All that they ask is that they do not fall further behind, and that their families be taken care of. There are police officers who will see a gross pay deduction of over one thousand dollars if these proposals go into effect — that is no small amount in a police officer's family budget.

Our city law enforcement professionals are public servants and they understand all that goes along with that title. Recent events remind us exactly why they are here and the risks that they undertake each day. They continue to embrace that challenge and are humbled by the trust the public has placed in their hands.

We all know that budgets are about making choices and often those choices are difficult. All I ask is that you consider this city's dedicated police officers and their families as you make your choices and the impact your choices will have on them.

We ask that you contact your Alexandria City Council member and ask them to uphold the promises that they have made to our law enforcement professionals. The Alexandria City Council repeatedly professes that the employees of Alexandria are their most important asset. We ask now that they show their support and place these critical employee issues as priorities when considering the budget.

Thank you for your attention and concern.
