Homicide in North Old Town

Former Alexandria resident killed returning to neighborhood he grew up in.

There was more to Colby Dielle McClennon than a criminal record. He'd had an arrest record with using and selling drugs, but that's not what Janice Bates remembers about McClennon. The McClennon she remembers was a young boy who came over to her house asking to play Atari with her son. McClennon was raised less than a block away from where he was found murdered in North Old Town on Dec. 1.

Responding to a shots fired call around 9:30 p.m., police found McClennon near Powhatan Park. McClennon died at the scene. Police are investigating the murder but have made no arrests.

McClennon, 41, had been in and out of jail on various drug or theft related charges, most recently being released earlier in 2016 to a facility in California.

“Colby used to deliver the newspapers around the neighborhood,” said James Bates, a resident of Colonial Avenue. “Everybody knew Colby. It's a shame he came all the way back from California to his home just to get killed.”

While neighbors and local parents are still divided over designs for the new Patrick Henry School, a plea from school principal Ingrid Bynum helped move the Planning Commission to support the School Board’s plans for the facility at its Dec. 6 meeting.

While parents and faculty at Patrick Henry support option A.1 for the school, which has separate entrances to the school for buses and for other vehicles, local residents supported option C.1, which keeps all traffic to and from the school on Taney Avenue and away from the smaller, residential N. Latham Street. Though opinions within the group varied, the Patrick Henry Advisory Group agreed in an April meeting to recommend option C.1. However, the School Board voted in favor of option A.1, citing safety and budgetary concerns. At the Dec. 6 meeting, Planning Commission Chair Mary Lyman said she’d kept a tally of how many speakers were in favor of C.1 and A.1 and said it was split right down the middle. However, while Lyman said she understood the concerns of the parents, she and other members of the commission said Bynum’s recommendation of the A.1 design carried a lot of weight.

Bynum emphasized that the three-level design of A.1 helped keep the three developmental stages attending Patrick Henry separate. According to Bynum, keeping the bus entrance separate from the walking and drop-off entrance helps keep the students safer.

“Our parents want safety and a sound instructional program,” said Bynum. “This design is what they have chosen to best help achieve their dreams, their hopes, and the best wishes for their children. This [design] means my kids will have a safe place to be dropped off.”

While public speakers brought up the controversy over the School Board’s rejection of the advisory group’s recommendation, Commissioner Maria Wasowski said that the School Board is never bound to follow the recommendation of an advisory group.

“The city bends over backwards to be open with the public,” said Wasowski. “Advisory groups … come up with recommendations, it does not make a definitive decision. As we heard tonight, there isn’t always consensus. This is a way of having a discussion … There is a public good in having a school that is functional, safe, and clean that can accommodate the kids that it needs to. Change is difficult for a community and there are a lot of considerations, but the argument made for this layout is very persuasive and the design works well with the housing and apartment buildings around it.”

The Patrick Henry design was proved in a 7-0 vote.

‘Rally for Rose’ Del Ray to host fundraiser for Cruz family.

The Del Ray Business Association will host a “Rally for Rose” fundraiser Dec. 13 for the family of Rosemarie Cruz, who died Dec. 4 from injuries sustained after being struck by a vehicle while crossing Mount Vernon Avenue at W. Glebe Road.

Cruz, 49, was the deli manager at Market2Market in Del Ray and leaves behind a husband and two young daughters.

“She brought so much love to all of us, her family, our staff, our customers, the whole community,” said Larry Ponzi, owner of Market2Market, St. Elmo’s Coffee Pub, and Cafe Pizziolo. “This is what we can do for her now — raise money for these kids, for her family.”

The fundraiser will take place Dec. 13 from 5 to 9 p.m. Restaurants on the St. Elmo’s block of Mt. Vernon Avenue — Market2Market, St. Elmo’s Coffee Pub, The Dairy Godmother, Holy Cow and Pork Barrel BBQ — will offer special menu items for a $20 donation. All proceeds from that menu will go to the fund for Cruz’s daughters. In addition, a number of Del Ray businesses have donated gift certificates for a raffle to be held during the event.

Cruz lived in Alexandria with her husband, Romy Sarangay, and their 10-year-old and 12-year-old daughters. She also leaves behind a 26-year-old daughter and a 19-year-old son in the Philippines.

For those who want to support the family but cannot make it to the fundraiser, a GoFundMe account has been set up at https://www.gofundme.com/family-of-rose-cruz

A black gloved hand scoops upward with a shiny brass bell. The white gloves are saved for performance to keep fingerprints from damaging the surface of the bells. Linda Cancellieri, director of Music at Trinity United Methodist Church on Cameron Mills Road says, “The sound waves travel out of the top of the bell in a horizontal position. To stop the sound, you clamp the bell against your body.” It is Thursday night handbell practice for the Trinity Ringers. They are getting ready for the special Christmas concert on Sunday, Dec. 11 at 10:45 a.m. “Every year I have a different theme. One year it was Appalachia; one year it was Celtic.”

This year the theme is A Medieval & Renaissance Christmas with the choirs accompanied by professional musicians from area bands and orchestras. She says all of the church’s choirs will also participate in the program.

Cancellieri directs four different choirs at Trinity. “K-5 is the Trinity Trebes. The teen choir is from 5-12, and then there is the Chancel Choir and the handbells.” Cancellieri says she has been working on this Christmas program since July when she began hiring the professionals, and the church choir began practicing since September.

Eight handbell ringers are lined up at two tables in the front of the church, bells in front of them. Cancellieri says, “We have a three-octave set of handbells and of chimes. They are arranged like a piano keyboard with most players responsible for two notes. See the handbell music looks very similar to piano music and is arranged like a piano keyboard. The church has a three-octave set of bells with most ringers responsible for two notes. They are preparing for their annual Christmas concert on Dec. 11 at 10:45 a.m. This year’s theme is A Medieval and Renaissance Christmas.”

Gillman says, “My b and b flat were mixed. Can we pick up at 13 so I can do that?” They start again. Cancellieri says, “OK. Stop. You’re a measure ahead.” She says she is constantly looking in the neighbor hood for more ringers. “You don’t have to be a member of the church to be in any of our choirs. It is easy to do, and it’s fun.”

Cancellieri got interested in playing the organ “back when we had those school assemblies in Clifton, New Jersey. The music teacher was a professional organ- ist and invited anyone interested to study with her.” Cancellieri went on to graduate from Middleburg College and to take subsequent further training in special techniques including with the German contralto Frauke Haasemann “who influenced my organ training.” She has been at Trinity for almost 15 years. “I have been playing for about two years since I was 12.” Lane has the largest and heaviest C, D, and E bells.

At the other end of the scale is Mary Gillman who has two small bells in each hand — E and F in her left and G and A in her right. “I used to be at the other end with the big bells but when someone left this position I thought it would be interesting to play two bells in each hand, a new challenge.” She says she has been playing about 8 years.

Cancellieri steps to the front of the group, arms in the air. “OK, are we ready?” She nods her head and counts 3 and 4 and 1 — to give the ringers a cadence for when it is time for their bell to be played. The melody resonates to the back of the sanctuary.

Walter Griffin was an all star. Griffin led the Parker-Grey Men’s Basketball team to win the State Championship in 1955, 1956, and 1957. The team had a 38-game winning streak, winning their last 12 games in 1956 and going undefeated in 1957. Newspaper reports are filled with stories of Griffin sweeping over the court. At a school board meeting on Dec. 1, Griffin and four others were voted into the Alexandria City Public Schools Athletic Hall of Fame. But for Griffin Smith, he will always be dad.

“I remember him being larger than life,” said Smith. “He was tall, always picking us up, taking us to grocery stores. I remember him being there for us. This other stuff, the basketball, learned all that after the fact. I didn’t know about that while he was alive … All he wanted to do was a dad. Nothing else really mattered. That’s why he never told me about the basketball stuff. That was a lifetime ago for him.”

Smith suspected Griffin’s basketball memories had also been tainted by his experiences in college. After graduating from Parker-Grey, Griffin attended University of Connecticut and continued playing basketball. During one game his freshman year, his mother collapsed and died in the stands. A few months later, Griffin lost his father as well. Afterwards, basketball became a smaller part of Griffin’s life. He focused on engineering, working for Western Electric for 25 years before retiring to take a job working on cars. Griffin was at work when he died.

When Smith was 13, he came home from basketball practice to find a note on the door saying to call his aunt. He and his younger brothers went to their house, where they sat down and their aunts explained that his father, 57, had died as a result of an enlarged heart. Smith said it took a while for his father’s death to sink in. “(My family) lived together in two different houses,” said Smith. “He was always around but it was in two different houses. So when they said he was gone, it took a while for me to actually mourn. It took years. It changed the whole dynamics of the family. I instantly became a different person. I was shielded from a lot of things. I went to MacArthur while everyone else in neighborhood went to George Mason. Mom and dad shielded me. It was all about books and learning. Once he died, everything opened up. I realized I lived in a bad neighborhood. She was gone too, she was in mourning.”

Smith said his father’s death forced him to grow up faster. His younger brothers were seven and four when their father died, and Smith had to help raise them. Smith continued playing basketball after his father’s death, which was how he met Robert Dawkins. The first time Dawkins met Smith, Dawkins said it was like seeing a ghost. Fifty years earlier, Dawkins had played on the Parker-Grey High School basketball team with Walter Griffin.

Mary Ann Kinder

Mary Ann Kinder (ne Staroscik) died in her home on the evening of Dec. 1, 2016. As a homemaker and mother, her greatest joy was being with her family. Born and raised in Nebraska, Mary and her lifelong sweetheart and husband, Alexander William Kinder, enjoyed the many adventures and travels that an Air Force service life provided.

At retirement, Al and Mary settled in Alexandria where, for 35 years, they were active members of Blessed Sacrament Church. As a devout Catholic, Mary shared her beliefs through ministry to the elderly and the poor. She also participated in many prayer and Bible study groups. Mary thrived on creating intimate gatherings in her home, with her adven- turous cuisine and impeccable sense of elegance and festivity. Her passions included sewing and decorating her home. Mary is survived by her daughter, Sherry Blood of Virginia Beach, and by her son, Michael Kinder of Annapolis, Md. She is also survived by her younger sister Rose, five grandchildren and three great grandchildren. Preceding her in death are her younger sisters, Peggy and Suzanne. Recalling the Day of ‘Infamy’

The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor came in two waves. The first hit its target at 7:53 a.m. followed by a second wave an hour later. Within 90 minutes it was over. Left behind was chaos: 2,403 Americans dead with another 1,178 wounded; 188 destroyed planes and a Pacific Fleet crippled by bombs coming through the ceiling. “That was the first time I was scared. I could see the wreckage. I was still in my skivvies when the first bomb jingling in their pockets from payday a few days earlier. I was still in my skivvies when the first bomb landed outside the barracks.”

The Zeros’ rounds hit a flare box in the B-17,” Groff said at a recent Rotary Club of Alexandria luncheon. “We didn’t believe a sneak attack was possible. We were told — and believed — that the islands were impregnable and that no one could get close to us. We were a victim of our own propaganda.”

At the time, Groff was a 19-year-old chief warrant officer serving in the Army Air Corps Rescue Boat Service. Now 94 years old, he remembers vividly that moment 75 years ago when “hell came raining down on us.”

“Most of us were still asleep in our bunks on what was a typical Hawaiian morning,” said Groff. “A few lucky ones were on leave in Honolulu, money still jingling in their pockets from payday a few days earlier. I was still in my skivvies when the first bomb landed outside the barracks.”

The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor came in two waves. The first hit its target at 7:53 a.m. followed by a second wave an hour later. Within 90 minutes it was over. Left behind was chaos: 2,403 Americans dead with another 1,178 wounded; 188 destroyed planes and a Pacific Fleet crippled by eight damaged or destroyed battleships. In one stroke the Japanese propelled the United States into World War II.

“When the bombs began to fall, personal security was forgotten,” Groff said at a recent Rotary Club of Alexandria luncheon. “That was the first time I was scared. I could see the bombs coming through the ceiling. But to do our duty was all that mattered. We responded to the challenge.”

As Japanese Zeros strafed the base with gunfire, Groff headed to a baseball field to help set up machine guns. He eventually made his way to the roof of his boathouse duty station, where he manned a machine gun. It was there he saw an unarmed American B-17 bomber try to land on the runway just beyond his station.

“The Zeros’ rounds hit a flare box in the B-17,” Groff recalled. “By the time it finished rolling the plane had burned in half.”

Hickam Air Force Base was one of Japan’s primary targets during the attack on Pearl Harbor. As a result, it suffered extensive damage, aircraft losses and loss of life with 189 people killed and 303 wounded.

“We didn’t realize at the time that day would become such a significant part of world history,” Groff said.

Col. Kim Ching (ret.), a member of American Legion Post 24 in Old Town, was a teenager living in Honolulu with his family when the attacks occurred.

“No one knew what was happening,” said Ching. “I had an uncle in the Hawaii Territorial Guard so we were getting a little more information than others but that day was one of stunned chaos and confusion.”

In the wake of the attacks, Ching received permission from his mother to join the military just shy of his 17th birthday. Four years later he would be among the troops standing on the deck of the USS Missouri to witness the signing of the Japanese Instrument of Surrender.

“If there aren’t many of us left who remember that day,” Ching said. “It is only because of God’s grace that I am here while others are not.”

At the time of the attacks, there were more than 80,000 U.S. service members living on Oahu. It is believed that fewer than 2,000 are still alive today.

“Our ranks are growing thinner each day,” said Groff, who will lay a wreath at the WWII Memorial in Washington as part of the formal 75th anniversary ceremonies on Dec. 7. “It’s important to remember those who fought in the Battle of Pearl Harbor and survived that day of infamy. These are the men and women who were at the forefront of our nation’s Greatest Generation.”

Col. Kim Ching, left and CWO Jay Groff visited American Legion Post 24 in Alexandria to commemorate V-J Day and recall the attacks on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

Coming Together over Climate Change

By Charles Hernick

As the Republican candidate in Virginia’s Eighth Congressional District, which leans hard left, I knew faced a steep challenge going into this November’s election. On election night, I lost. Despite my disappointment, I was gratified to discover that many Virginians supported my fiscally conservative policies. By putting forward a plan to address climate change with a pro-growth free-market framework, I am proud to have made climate change a central issue in at least one Congressional race.

I made no bones about it: climate change is real, it’s here, and market-based approaches are the best solution we’ve got. Voters in my district responded to honest talk from a conservative on climate change. The Eighth District supported me over Donald Trump by more than 10 points. That’s a good showing in one of the most heavily Democratic districts in the Commonwealth. Independent voters and lifelong Republicans alike responded to an honest discussion of climate change. They were eager to hear a conservative candidate’s plan to face this challenge because they want to protect their loved ones and see the U.S. lead global energy innovation.

Environmental issues aren’t just for the left or the right. Across the political spectrum, Americans care about their children’s health. They know that climate change increases the risk of asthma, allergies, and other respiratory diseases, especially among children. That’s why the American Public Health Association has named 2017 the Year of Climate Change and Health.

Many moderate and conservative voters are people of faith, and they are responding to faith leaders’ calls to protect working families from the effects of climate change. Finally, moderate and conservative voters have great respect for our men and women in uniform, and they know that the U.S. military has called climate change a significant risk to national security.

As I read the media coverage of this election, I saw that there was some confusion about conservative attitudes to climate change. Conservative people do support real action on climate. We want to protect our kids. We want to serve our faiths. We want to protect our children. We want to protect our troops. Solving climate change is a conservative goal.

Market-based solutions can get us there. The votes in my district are proof of that. Trying to subsidize my business. I don’t want — or need — Alexandria to support an artist-led Torpedo Factory. I support an artist-led Torpedo Factory.

Letters to the Editor

Uncertainty Hurts Torpedo Factory

To the Editor:

I founded the Torpedo Factory Arts Center. It gave me the space and tools to develop my business while creating my art. The opportunity to connect with so many Alexandria residents and people from all over our region and the world through art has been inspiring. Artists, not bureaucrats, built the spirit and draw of this place.

It has been difficult to watch this spirit wither. The current uncertainty of Alexandria’s takeover of the Factory has sunk community morale. The upheaval of this transition is hurting my business. Too many artistic communities have floundered as well-intentioned government and non-profit organizations have stripped their artist stakeholders of agency. I fear watching the Torpedo Factory go the way of Arlington’s now-defunct Artisphere or Washington’s Corcoran Gallery of Art.

With tightening budgets and real issues that need the city’s help, I don’t want — or need — Alexandria to subsidize my business. I want to continue building on the diverse, creative marketplace that our founders envisioned 42 years ago. Alexandria has shown a commitment to maintain an arts presence on the waterfront, but only if the Torpedo Factory artists’ association has offered a concrete, accountable plan for the center’s future — one that doesn’t cost the city a dime in operational costs. I encourage you to read the details of that plan at factoryartists.org.

Many parts of the artist’s plan can be seen in programs that are already underway. The new revenue-generating, sold-out performances of A Dream Within a Dream: Madness — the artist-sponsored, immersive theater project at the Torpedo Factory — rekindled the vibrancy of the art center. We are building community engagement initiatives like the artist-student collaboration with T.C. Williams High School, where we introduced the Pour Your Art Out public arts project and our 20-year public high school artist-student mentorship program.

Torpedo Factory artists have been attracting people to Alexandria for decades. We did it while opening our doors to the community, near and far, and inviting the community to grow with us. The final decision for our future will fall to City Council. The longer the council takes to make that decision, the more our unique landmark and my business suffer. The artists benefit from our beautiful waterfront home, but as we thrive, so does Alexandria. If you support a more dynamic and self-sustaining Torpedo Factory Arts Center with artists at the heart, join me in urging City Council members to move quickly to approve the transition to an artist-led Torpedo Factory.

Demolish First, Discuss Later?

To the Editor:

This week we learned that the Washington Area Bicyclist Association (WABA) with the Alexandria Bicycle & Pedestrian Advisory Committee’s (BPAC) assistance is conducting a crowdfunding exercise to raise $50,000 to demolish two concrete barriers at the “unused parking lot” at Jones Point Park. As of the circulated email, this will occur if they can reach $35,000, which leaves open the question of who or what entity provides the remaining 20%. The stated goal is to build a “bicycle campus.”

There are several ways to verify what is going on with this strange and rather bizarre call to “demolish” a structure at Jones Point Park. The best is just to reach out to the National Park Service (NPS) and to the City of Alexandria. The facts are the NPS is in the process of evaluating and designing a new park landscape but that a final design, one that will trigger implementation (including the WABA/BPAC proposed demolition) is still in draft stage. It was only a couple of months ago that primarily local residents, who regularly use the parking lot and park for many diverse activities were asked to comment on the draft proposal. We are no where near “demolishing” anything. We are a very early stage of consensual development.

Furthermore, the NPS has confirmed that their draft plan indicates the possibility of a “traffic garden,” which would consist of lines drawn on the parking lot surface. This does not imply a bicycle campus, which if you lookup the word refers to dedicated buildings for largely educational purposes. In its zeal to advance cycling, are the NPS is in the process of conducting a crowdfunding exercise (including the WABA/BPAC) deliberately misleading the public?

The City of Alexandria’s letter to NPS states that its long held desire is to restore parking access under the Wilson Bridge in order to serve the park and historic sites. It goes on to state that changing the current usage would require both the Virginia and Maryland Departments of Transportation to make a recommendation to the Federal Highway Administration. In addition, the city states that it would like restoration of two playing fields and slowing bicyclists at entrances to the park. No where is a “bicycle campus” mentioned or even alluded to.

Based on what we know and how the process must unfold to make it happen, the WABA/BPAC invitation to all to come help demolish the concrete barriers at Jones Point Park in order to establish the first in the region “bicycle campus” is not only seemingly ignorant but the kind of misleading messaging that we have just so painfully experienced.

This WABA exercise that attempts to sidestep the well honed responsible process the NPS uses to ensure the “public,” especially locally impacted people, is equitably served may someday help to demolish concrete, but right now it mostly serves to destroy trust in their intent and ability to take others into consideration when pursuing a narrow interest in a widely enjoyed public space.

Celebrating George Mason

To the Editor:

Happy 281st birthday to my great-great-great-grandfather, George Mason IV of Gunston Hall. On the occasion of Mason’s birthday on Dec. 11, let’s celebrate his most important contribution to our nation — the Bill of Rights.

Although James Madison is credited with drafting our Constitution’s Bill of Rights (the first 10 amendments), it is important to remember that he modeled them after George Mason’s Virginia Declaration of Rights. Regrettably, historians sometimes overlook this very important fact and do not give credit where credit is due. Also, Mason is often forgotten because he died in 1792, just when the leaders we usually recognize — Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe — were in the forefront of our emerging nation.

There is much more about George Mason to celebrate. Not only was he a brilliant statesman and scholar figuring prominently in our nation’s history, he was also an admirable husband, father, and friend. Devoted to his family, Mason always put them first. He adored his beautiful wife Ann Eilbeck Mason and was heartbroken when she died in 1773 at the age of 39, leaving him with nine young children to rear. I often wonder if this great loss influenced his politics.

So on this occasion of his birthday, I extend a heartfelt “Thank You” for George Mason’s insistence on a Bill of Rights to our Constitution that ensures and protects our freedoms. Helen Hill Miller is the author of a biography entitled “George Mason Gentleman Revolutionary,” and indeed he was — “A Gentleman Revolutionary.”

A very proud descendant,

The Washington Revels, with a cast of more than 100 performers, all from the Washington D.C. area, has been performing large-scale theater with traditional music and dance since 1983. This year’s chorus members include eight Alexandria residents. The actors, singers, musicians and dancers range from 8-year-old children to 80-year-old adults.

The ensemble started as a group that exclusively produced Christmas plays; however, the Revels have since expanded to put on more than 50 events throughout the year. Still, the group often considers the “Christmas Revels” productions to be the heart of its theater company. This year’s 34th annual Christmas show, “A Nordic Celebration of the Winter Solstice in Music, Dance and Drama,” will have eight performances on the weekends between Dec. 10-18 at Lisner Auditorium in Washington D.C.

“The set is built on the concept of the Northern Lights, the costumes represented the traditional clothing styles of five different countries,” Rasi said.

Amateurs and professionals alike — children, teens and adults — are welcome to audition for the chorus of “Christmas Revels” productions. Auditions start as early as spring, and while there have been repeat performers over the years, everyone who tries out is guaranteed an equal chance.

Paula Thomas of Alexandria is one of this year’s chorus members who says the 2016 Christmas show is her first with the Revels. She was inspired to try out for the show after years of enjoying Revels performances as an interactive audience member.

“I have attended ‘Christmas Revels’ and ‘Spring Revels’ since 2009,” Thomas said. “The theme and content of this year’s production inspired me to audition. I lived in Denmark as an exchange student from 1988 to 1989.”

In addition to celebrating a culture that hits home for her, Thomas has another reason that being a part of this year’s Christmas Revels has been so special: From the auditions in late spring through the time-intensive regular rehearsals that started in September, her 10-year-old daughter is a part of the Children’s Chorus.

“This has been a lovely and heartwarming experience,” Thomas said. “I wanted to share something of my Scandinavian heritage with my daughter. I am grateful to Revels for the opportunity to do just that.”

She added that her theatrical resume now has a large gap between this year’s “Christmas Revels” chorus role and her last performance as a high school student. Her daughter, on the other hand, is active within the theater department of Washington Waldorf School in Maryland.

Both Thomas and Rasi said that seeing this year’s “Christmas Revels” show should be on everyone’s holiday to-do list.

“This is a beautiful show for children,” Thomas said. “Christmas traditions from these countries are festive, full of good-humor and ‘star’ the innocence and liveliness of children.”

Chef Richard Euripides slowly layers his lasagna with Zerega noodles, marinara, shredded provolone and meat. When he is finished, it will have five layers and nearly spill out of the pan.

Meet Chef Euripides
At the Royal Restaurant, a community institution since 1904.

By Shirley Ruhe

Richard Euripides, chef at the Royal Restaurant on N. Asaph Street, has boiled two packages of ribbed Zerega lasagna noodles for a customer favorite. “I boiled them slowly for 30 minutes because I’ve found if you cook them slowly, the noodles don’t stick,” Euripides spreads a thin layer of marinara sauce in the bottom of a large, heavy aluminum pan. “We make everything homemade here. This pan will make enough to cut 20 squares of lasagna,” he adds.

He has made the marinara sauce. “I sauté chopped celery, green pepper and crushed garlic.” He pinches his fingers together. “Then I add diced tomatoes and tomato sauce and simmer the sauce for two hours. I make marinara sauce every day and spaghetti sauce and alfredo.”

Finally he adds salt and pepper and Italian seasoning. He fits the first layer of cooked lasagna noodles into the pan over the marinara sauce. Another layer of marinara is topped with shredded provolone. He repeats the layers, and then adds the first layer of meat. When the lasagna is finished it will have five layers and nearly spill out the top of the pan. “I like to put on a lot of cheese; it makes the lasagna rich.”

Euripides says his favorite version of lasagna is Florentine. He says the Bar Association and the American Legion always order this version. “I squeeze the water out of the spinach and sauté it in olive oil. The spinach is mixed with feta cheese.” Again many layers of noodles, spinach and cheese. He adds some shredded carrots for color and tops with a layer of ricotta mixed with cottage cheese and a sprinkle of cinnamon.

Euripides says his favorite version of lasagna is Florentine. He says the Bar Association and the American Legion always order this version. “I squeeze the water out of the spinach and sauté it in olive oil. The spinach is mixed with feta cheese.” Again many layers of noodles, spinach and cheese. He adds some shredded carrots for color and tops with a layer of ricotta mixed with cottage cheese and a sprinkle of cinnamon.

recipe for the family at Easter time in America.” His eyes light up. “They loved it.” He says he uses pork and the secret ingredient is found high on a shelf in a large plastic container of dried mint from the garden.

He walks back to the counter to finish the lasagna. Large containers of ricotta mixed with cottage cheese. He sprinkles a scoop of sugar into the mixture. “Makes it rich.” One- handed, Euripides heads for the oven. Finally a sprinkle of cinnamon. He spoons a thick layer of the ricotta mixture on top of the lasagna and reaches into a bag of shredded Parmesan for the final touch.

Euripides heads for the oven that is warmed to 400 degrees. The oven door is already crusted with many other lasagnas. The lasagna will cook for one hour and be ready just in time for the lunch crowd. Over time the menu has changed but the “eat healthier” trend has not changed the Royal Restaurant. “Not here,” he says. And the recipe for lasagna goes back to 1904 with the original owner of the restaurant.

“I happened to walk into the gym at George Washington Middle School and when I walked through the door, I saw the figure, and it was identical to Walter Griffin. I said ‘goddamn, that’s him!’ All I could do was stand there and stare,” Dawkins said.

Afterwards, Dawkins approached Smith and said that he’d briefly known Smith’s father and offered to talk about their times together. As Dawkins showed Smith the newspaper clippings, Smith said it was the first time he’d started to learn more about his father’s past. As Smith grew up, slowly more and more people began recognizing Smith as Griffin’s son and approached him, sharing stories about his dad. Basketball was a recurring theme, but Smith said what stuck with him were the other stories about his dad. As they looked through the old newspapers, Smith said he remembered Dawkins telling him the clippings would only talk about basketball, they won’t talk about how intelligent or how determined Griffin was.

“He was really likeable, so full of confidence,” Dawkins remembered. “Walter [Griffin] has earned the right to be remembered.”

Nelson Greene Jr. was a couple years behind Griffin but said a lot of the students at Parker-Grey had grown up as neighborhood friends. Greene said that during halftime, Griffin and his girlfriend Ruby at the time would go to center court, back to back. Ruby was the head cheerleader and was nearly as tall as Griffin. Greene said they would kick him off from there, simultaneously dunking on either end of the court. The crowd would go wild. Greene said it was the highlight of each game.

Parker-Grey was Alexandria’s all-black high school, and though its athletic feats weren’t as widely covered in the papers as those of the white George Washington High School, Greene said the relationships between their basketball teams was closer than most people realized.

“One year, when Walter [Griffin] was on the state championship, George Washington were also state champions,” said Greene. “What people did not know is those two teams used to get together once a week and play against each other.”

Sometimes they would meet at the school, and coaches would just disappear. Other times, Greene said the teams would agree to meet at a basketball court someplace in the city.

“The teams would have a scrimmage against each other,” said Greene. “That’s why they were so good. As a result, there were lots of people across that racial boundary that became friends. You had exceptional young men on both sides.”

Greene was vice president of the student council at the time and said the two schools tried to coordinate a game to benefit the Salvation Army. Greene said the students, coaches, and school officials all agreed, they even had 20 police officers volunteer to be security at the event and City Council had promised to attend, but when the School Board found out there were complaints from parents and the game was cancelled.

As more time passes, Smith said many of those connections to his father and Parker-Grey begin to disappear. The threat of losing those connections has also forced Smith to make life changes, like forging a closer relationship to Smith’s older sister who remembers more about their father. Smith said she was just as shocked as he was when she discovered the full extent of their father’s local fame. Smith is putting together a documentary about Parker-Grey and about his father to preserve those stories for his younger brothers and his children.

At 34, Smith has two children of his own. For Smith, being a father has changed some of his perspective on his dad’s life.

“When you start having kids, you realize these kids aren’t going anywhere,” said Smith. “When you bring them home from the hospital they are your kids. It changes the way you deal with things. These kids need you. If you go out and do something stupid, it doesn’t just affect you, it affects them. Everything I do has a trickle effect, I remember my grandfather saying that too. If you don’t do what you were made to do, it impacts everybody. I didn’t understand what she meant by that, but when I was a father I understood.”

Experts suggest holding honest conversations.

By Marilyn Campbell

A recent study from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration shows that increased access to alcoholic beverages for underage drinkers, combined with less oversight from distracted adults and mixed messages from parents may fuel surges in underage drinking during the holidays.

“A lot of parents would be surprised that their child would drink, but there are a lot of ways for children to get alcohol,” said Allen Lomax, executive director of the Substance Abuse Prevention Coalition of Alexandria. “It’s so easy for them to get alcohol from their parents’ home if it’s not locked up. You have to constantly monitor parties in your home when teens are there because there’s a good chance that someone, even if it’s not your own child, said Peavy, “would have alcohol.”

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, underage drinkers are responsible for between 10 and 20 percent of all alcohol consumed. They also make up the highest percentage of impaired drivers, and during the holiday season, two to three times more people die in alcohol-related crashes than they do during the rest of the year. In fact, 40 percent of traffic fatalities during this period involve a driver who is under the influence of alcohol. As a result, child safety advocates encourage parents to have frequent conversations with their children about alcohol.

“It is best to start the conversation … long before the child might be in a situation where they partake in underage drinking,” said Linda R. Cote-Reilly, Ph.D., a developmental psychologist, certified family life educator and professor at Marymount University in Arlington. “It’s not that different from conversations about sexual activity. One big difference, though, is that the child will have observed his or her own parents’ alcohol use, so parents should be prepared to … answer pointed questions.”

In fact, personal experience saying ‘no’ to any circumstances that are unpleasant, can be teachable moments and should not be avoided or sugarcoated, said Cote-Reilly. Inform older children of any family history of alcoholism or alcohol abuse. “Some children will have an alcoholic in the family, and parents should always address that situation honestly and in child appropriate language. For example, a child might say, ‘Why did Uncle Jim fall asleep during Thanksgiving dinner?’ and the parent could respond, ‘Because he drank too much alcohol.’”

Because alcohol is a legal substance that children often observe adults consuming, and that they themselves might legally consume themselves later in life, the issue can be confusing.

Cote-Reilly advises parents to start by mulling over their own views on alcohol. “Parents values will vary,” she said. “If the child is an older adolescent, parents can explain why they made the choices they did, for example, to be a teetotaller, regular drinker or somewhere in between.”

While parents want to curb underage drinking to keep their high school children safe and avoid legal penalties, rather than simply banning alcohol, parents “need to lay the groundwork for their children to consume alcohol responsibly in early adulthood,” said Amy L. Best, Ph.D., professor and chair, Department of Sociology and Anthropology, George Mason University. This is especially important for students transitioning to college, where binge drinking is more common.

Engaging in a straightforward discussion that is void of mandates and hard-lined rules is the most effective approach in getting children to be receptive, advised Best.

“Research suggests that when parents focus on rules and discipline, adolescents tend to be more likely to engage in surreptitious drinking and succumb to peer pressure,” agreed Shannon N. Davis, Ph.D., associate professor of sociology at George Mason University. In fact, parents who talk to their adolescents about drinking as something that is forbidden might actually enhancing its desirability. Instead, [discuss it] as something that in moderation is part of adult life.

“Children often harbor ideas about alcohol that are downright wrong,” said Best, “and it’s OK to be different is a hard thing, and it is a hard transition to college, where binge drinking is more common.”

Ask a child to research the consequences of underage drinking, both legal and safety, and review that list with your child. Develop a family position on alcohol consumption, set clear boundaries and make sure children understand those repercussions.

“It is important that teens have the means to forge a sense of self that is separate from their parents,” said Best. “That’s the fundamental developmental project of adolescence. When teens have productive means to forge a sense of self independent of parent(s), alcohol holds less appeal.”

One overarching factor that affects not only underage drinking, but other adolescent temptations is the process of developing a healthy sense of self-worth. “Parents want to ensure that their adolescents have high levels of self-esteem that allow them to feel comfortable saying ‘no’ to any circumstance where they are uncomfortable or pressured by their friends,” said Davis. “Reminding adolescents that it is OK to be different is a hard thing, and it is a hard thing for the adolescents to hear.”
7th Murder This Year

James and Janice Bates’ son, James “Bobby” Bates, knew and played basketball with McClennon when they grew up together. Bobby Bates described McClennon as timid and humble, though the two drifted apart as they became adults.

According to Janice Bates, McClennon’s grandmother Margie Jackson used to clean the park McClennon was killed in. “She wanted to make sure it was clean and safe,” said Janice Bates.

According to Janice Bates, Jackson had been a prominent figure in the local community until her death a few years ago. After someone died, Jackson would walk up and down the streets collecting donations for the family to make sure the deceased received a proper funeral.

“He was very mannerable. He had to be. His grandmother was very religious and came from a strong Christian faith.”

While shrines with pictures and gifts honoring the dead remain at the sites of two murders earlier this year, no shrine marks where McClennon died in Powhatan Park. Janice Bates said she hasn’t been able to bring herself to go back to the park.

Many in the neighborhood expressed fears and frustrations about the lighting and policing of the park for years leading up to the murder.

“I’m disgusted,” said Debra Wilson, who had heard the gunshots the night of the murder. “It’s so dark in that alleyway. We’ve been urging City Council to install them for years. It’s a danger for residents.”

Wilson was one of the residents that had spoken at earlier community meetings following the nearby deaths of Saquan Hall and Pierre Clark. Wilson and others had warned city officials at the time that if the park weren’t lit, violence and illegal activity would continue.

“There’s a lot of disbelief here,” said Beth Simmons. “That’s a dark alleyway and there used to be a lot of drug issues back there.”

Others said the city should go further, including making sections of the park more visible or adding a camera to the site.

“We need a camera in that park and the city needs to monitor it,” said Greg Hudgins, a 25-year resident of the neighborhood. “It’s been a trouble spot. [This neighborhood] is highly desired. Any house on the market here is sold in days. It’s so close to the Metro, we see many young folks moving here with kids. I’m not concerned, but I don’t want those young local couples living nearby to feel afraid.”

“I’ve lived here for 18 years,” said Sophia Estevez. “It’s a quiet neighborhood. Something like this is concerning. I walk by that park all the time. We need more police activity there at night because it gets a little out of control sometimes.”

Estevez pointed over to a line of children walking along the sidewalk beside the park only a few hours after McClennon’s murder. “It’s shocking,” said Estevez. “There are kids around here.”

McClennon’s murder is the seventh in Alexandria in 2016, the most in the city since 2007.
