House Of Delegates Candidates Square Off In Debate

BY FALLON FORBUSH
THE CONNECTION

There are only three weeks left until Election Day and the race for the area's representative in the House of Delegates is heating up.

The two candidates vying to represent District 34, which includes Great Falls, McLean and parts of Vienna, in the Virginia General Assembly debated at the Great Falls Grange on Thursday evening, Oct. 12. The event was hosted by the Great Falls Citizens Association, an organization that does not endorse candidates but encourages a well-informed community.

Incumbent Democrat Del. Kathleen Murphy of McLean was at ease throughout the event, prodding the debate moderator to make sure the debate started promptly at 7:30 and ended on time. A Washington Nationals game was scheduled to start at 8 o'clock and the debate was scheduled to end at 9 o'clock, and she was determined to catch the ending.

"I'm a very big baseball fan," she said, proud to represent several players on the team who live in the district.

In contrast, events like this were atypical for her Republican challenger, Cheryl Buford of Vienna.

"This is a new experience for me," Buford said before the debate. Unlike Murphy, she has not received any organizational endorsements.

Though the event ended on time, Murphy's team lost to the Chicago Cubs 8-9, undoing its chance of competing in the World Series.

However, Murphy cannot say she has gotten everything her way as a member of the minority party in the capitol. Murphy is chief patron of 12 bills this legislative session, three of which became law.

The first bill was an effort to combat Virginia's opioid overdose epidemic. Opioids are drugs that mimic the properties of opiates like morphine and codeine, and include illegal drugs like heroin and legal drugs like fentanyl and prescription painkillers.

In February, Gov. Terry McAuliffe signed several bipartisan bills into law supporting needle-exchange programs, increased access to overdose-reversal drug naloxone, changes to opioid prescription policies and processes for providing care to infants exposed to opioids in utero.

MURPHY'S BILL required the Board of Pharmacy to develop guidelines for pharmacists in order to provide counseling and information to patients who are prescribed drugs regarding proper disposal of unused drugs.

The second bill, passed in March, prohibits postsecondary schools that are required to be certified by the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia from enrolling students without first informing them whether their credits are transferrable and if the school is accredited.

Tim Thompson, Dranesville District representative on the 2017 Chamber of Commerce School Bond Committee, spoke before the debate and encouraged the audience to vote yes for the $315 million school bond referendum that is on the ballot for the Nov. 7 general election.

The third bill, also passed in March, requires each school board in the commonwealth to publicize the actual public-teacher ratios of each middle and high school for the current school year.

Murphy was successful in passing these three bills this year because of their bipartisan support.

"I have to admit that it's a challenge being in the minority," Murphy said during the debate. "You do learn that you have to go and work together to get things done, and it is a little harder — for sure."

But it isn't a problem if she really wants to get it done.

"I am relentless when I see an issue that I believe we need to address and I go after a comrade on the other side; and so far, I've been very successful," she said.

However, her legislative scorecard was a point of attack for her opponent, who didn't let nerves get in the way of her performance.

"Over three sessions, she has gotten seven pieces of legislation passed," Buford said. "If you go to her website, it doesn't look all that much different from my website in the sense that it's very aspirational in terms of what she will do, what she hopes to do."

What Buford hopes to do has been encapsulated into an acronym that she has used to build her campaign, which she made sure to deliver to the crowd: SERVE. It stands for: "Shortening your commute, Energizing the commonwealth's economy, Rebooting our public schools, Vanquishing the opioid epidemic and Ensuring our neighborhoods are safe."

The questions in the debate focused on transportation, education, economy and the opioid crisis.

Both candidates are focused on increasing funding for transportation infrastructure, both telling the crowd that work on the American Legion Bridge is a priority.

Both candidates are also focused on increasing funding for public schools with Buford dead set on changing commonwealth funding formulas so school districts that have larger populations of students who speak English as a second language receive more funding for ESL programs.

Murphy emphasized the need to increase teacher pay in Fairfax County because salaries are not competitive with neighboring counties, while Buford argued that above average pension benefits level the playing field.

"Of course, we want to be generous, but there is an issue with the pensions that really needs to be resolved," Buford said. "When you look at the total compensation for our teachers, it really is relatively the same with the other districts. The difference is that it is deferred into the pensions."

Kathleen Murphy, 60, is a native of Chicago who spent her childhood moving around as a member of a military family. She graduated from high school in Phoenix and earned a bachelor's degree in political science and psychology. Professionally, she was a writer for a Nickelodeon show called "Beyond Belief" before working as a congressional aide on Capitol Hill for U.S. Rep. Charlie Wilson (D-Texas). During the Bill Clinton administration, she was appointed as a congressional liaison at the U.S. Agency for International Development, later serving as a senior advisor on international trade issues at the Department of Commerce. She is a member of the Finance and the Privileges and Elections committees and a member of the Virginia Board of Veterans Services.

Cheryl Buford is a native of Topeka, Kansas, who was raised in a suburb of Kansas City. She earned a bachelor's degree in education and a master's degree in family economics, both from Kansas State University. She also has a master's degree in public affairs from the University of Texas LBJ School of Public Affairs. Professionally, she started her career as a home economics teacher in Chicago. After that, she became a consultant for government agencies specializing in transportation and economic development. She is vice president of business development and marketing for Reston-based Social Capital Valuations, LLC. She says she was recruited to run for the House of Delegates by Jo Thoburn, chairwoman of the 10th Congressional District Republican Committee.

"We have quite a maze of regulations, so I would propose that any regulations that we pass from the General Assembly has to pass an economic analysis first," said Buford, whose campaign platform calls for slashing regulations imposed on the business community, especially smaller businesses.

While Murphy's view of regulations differs, she was sure to strut her pro-business purview.

"I support and have supported cutting red tape on our local, small businesses," Murphy said. "I think that it's got to be easier for small businesses to have access to capital so they can continue to grow. That is one of the reasons that I've been endorsed by the Northern Virginia Chamber of Commerce because I work very hard with them to try and be helpful to our business community and to make sure that we're doing the right things to make it a welcoming economy for businesses."

The candidates seemed to agree in approach to handling the opioid epidemic.

"We are losing three Virginians a week to the opioid epidemic," Buford said. "That is unconscionable. And we cannot incarcerate our way out of the problem."

Murphy agreed.

"We need more funding for mental health programs, we need more treatment programs and I agree totally that drug addictions cannot be cured with prison," Murphy said.

ROUND TWO

The candidates will debate again on Monday, Oct. 23, at 7:30 p.m. at Longfellow Middle School, which will be hosted by the McLean Citizens Association.

Alex Paal, a master technician with the station, operates the Jaws of Life hydraulic tool during a vehicle extrication exercise for open house spectators.

As a crowd watches, pilot Andrew Wiseman of Loudoun County takes off from the McLean Volunteer Fire Department during the open house carrying police officers and paramedics Ali Sepehri of Fairfax and Rob Murray of Centreville. The three work for the Fairfax County Police Department Helicopter Division, which provides support to the Fairfax County Fire and Rescue Department for aeromedical evacuation, search and rescue and other specialized air support as needed.

Fire Station Opened Its Doors for A Day

BY FALLON FORBUSH
THE CONNECTION

In celebration of Fire Prevention Week Oct. 8-14, all Fairfax County Fire and Rescue Department stations hosted open houses on Saturday, Oct. 14, where the public was invited to meet their local firefighters.

McLean Station No. 1 Fire Chief Lt. John Hootman and Board of Directors President Kay Hartgrove and their firefighters, paramedics and emergency medical technicians were on site to show off their vehicles and equipment and teach children and grownups alike about fire safety.

"We had a huge crowd," Hootman said.

A popular question curious guests asked was: "Why do fire engines show up for medical emergencies?"

It's a matter of response time, according to Hootman.

"There are more fire engines than ambulances that have trained paramedics," he said.

THE FIRE STATIONS in the county also have automatic aid agreements with Loudoun and Arlington counties, according to Hootman.

"The lines are transparent from dispatch," he said. "It all depends on what the person says who calls 911."

However, the most popular question topic during this year's open house was about Virginia's opioid overdose epidemic. Opioids are drugs that mimic the properties of opiates like morphine and codeine, and include illegal drugs like heroin and legal drugs like fentanyl and prescription painkillers.

"We told them: Yes, we've gotten more calls about it," Hartgrove said.

In February, Gov. Terry McAuliffe signed bipartisan bills into law supporting needle-exchange programs, increased access to overdose-reversal drug naloxone, changes to opioid prescription policies and processes for providing care to infants exposed to opioids in utero.

Some guests were concerned about whether the station had access to naloxone.

"Our medical providers already have the scope to deliver [overdose-reversal drugs]," Hootman said. "Typically, our paramedics can take care of [overdoses]."

The National Fire Protection Association, a global nonprofit organization that develops fire, sprinkler and electrical codes and standards, has a goal of eliminating death and injuries from fire, electrical and related hazards. In that effort, it develops educational programs to inform the public about the adoption of codes and safety issues.

NFPA has advertised Fire Prevention Week since 1922. This year's theme was, "Every Second Counts: Plan 2 Ways Out!"

EVACUEES could have less than two minutes to escape to safety after smoke alarms sound, according to the NFPA. Here are the key messages to the NFPA's annual campaign for preparing an escape plan:

- ❖ Draw a map of your home with all members of your household, marking two exits from each room and a path to the outside from each exit.

- ❖ Practice your home fire drill twice a year. Conduct one at night and one during the day with everyone in your home, and practice using different ways out.

- ❖ Teach children how to escape on their own in case you can't help them.

- ❖ Make sure the number of your home is clearly marked and easy for the fire department to find.

- ❖ Close doors behind you as you leave — this may slow the spread of smoke, heat and fire.

- ❖ Once you get outside, stay outside.

A "Plan Your Home Fire Escape" mini-lesson can be downloaded from the NFPA's website at www.FirePreventionWeek.org.

The station has approximately 60 volunteers and 45 full-time employees, with 15 working per shift.

Conversation Brew During 'Coffee with A Cop' Day

The first Wednesday in October has been deemed National "Coffee with A Cop" Day and police officers in the county took time to brew up conversations in their communities — one cup of coffee at a time.

The Fairfax County Police Department's Sully, Mount Vernon, McLean, Mason, Reston, Franconia, West Springfield and Fair Oaks district stations participated at various Starbucks, Dunkin' Donuts and McDonald's locations.

The national observance of visiting coffee shops wasn't out of the ordinary for the McLean officers at the only local coffee spot participating in the national event at Greenberry's Coffee Company in McLean.

"This is our coffee hang out," McLean District Station Commander Capt. John Trace said. "We're always out here supporting our community and to get some coffee."

What To Do Against the ‘Nightmare Scenario’?

BY STEPHEN R. RUTH
SCHAR SCHOOL OF POLICY AND GOVERNMENT
PROFESSOR OF PUBLIC POLICY
GEORGE MASON UNIVERSITY

We should fear Artificial Intelligence. Not in the future but now. Ask Sheryl Sandberg, chief operating officer of Facebook. She announced that her company, with its over 2 billion users, built software it cannot fully control. “We never intended or anticipated this functionality being used this way,” Sandberg said, “— and that is on us.” Facebook’s operating systems had allowed Russian operatives to create accounts and ads aimed at influencing the 2016 U.S. presidential election. The gigantic network seems to have created systems that are ungovernable.

Facebook’s problem hints at the extreme dangers lurking within Artificial Intelligence as it grows throughout the world. AI Experts are already talking about a “nightmare scenario,” where nations’ AI systems could ignite real-time conflicts. Consider, hair-trigger AI systems could eventually control several nations’ military responses’ and some error in any one algorithm could possibly lead to a nuclear catastrophe.

Between the Facebook case and the nightmare scenario is the immediate problem of millions of people losing jobs. Around the globe, programmable machines — including robots, cars and factory robots — are replacing humans in the workplace. Automation threatens 80 percent of today’s 3.7 million transportation jobs, one U.S. government report estimated, including truck and school bus drivers, taxi drivers and Uber and Lyft drivers. Another report indicates AI is threatening aspects of the many different jobs, including call center operators, surgeons, farmers, security guards, retail assistants, fast food workers and journalists. A 2015 study of robots in 17 countries found that they accounted for over 10 percent of the countries’ gross domestic product growth between 1993 and 2007. Consider, a major supplier for Apple and Samsung cell phones and computers, China’s Foxconn Technology Group, is planning to automate 60,000 factory jobs with robots, replacing its existing employees. Meanwhile, Ford’s factory in Cologne, Germany, not only replaced human workers with robots but also on some jobs stations position robots beside human workers — they are called cobots.

But these employment issues, as troubling as they are, cannot compare to the dangers envisioned by Elon Musk and Stephen Hawking. They are among the dozens of thought leaders who signed a letter harshly condemning governments’ increasing reliance on AI for military use. Their chief concern is autonomous weapons, another example of AI. The U.S. military is already developing armaments that do not require humans to operate them. These weapons are being created to offer battlefield support for human troops. Autonomous arms are dramatically easier to develop and mass-produce than nuclear weapons. They will likely to soon appear on black markets around the world, certain to be favored by terrorist groups. To quote from the open letter, the new autonomous weapons would be ideal for dark actions including “assassinations, destabilizing nations, subduing populations and selectively killing a particular ethnic group.”

There are some economic optimists like MIT’s Erik Brynjolfsson and Andrew McAfee, who feel that AI will eventually bring long term prosperity to the world, but even they admit that finding common ground among, economists, technologists and politicians is daunting. Obviously, it will be very difficult to craft legislation about AI without more agreement about its potential effects.

We should definitely be fearful of artificial intelligence, not just because it is clearly destined to affect the number of available jobs, including those in middle and even upper middle class domains, but because its potential military use can lead to a perilous future, if not controlled. As the open letter signed by Musk and Hawking concluded, “Starting a military AI arms race is a bad idea, and should be prevented by a ban on offensive autonomous weapons beyond meaningful human control.”

COMMENTARY

Shades of the Old South It is always important to vote, but it is more important than ever this year.

BY KENNETH R. “KEN” PLUM
STATE DELEGATE (D-36)

Just when you think things are changing you can be shocked to realize just how much they stay the same. Politics in Virginia are a prime example.

For more than a century after the Civil War the consistent factor in politics was race baiting. The then-called Democrats in the South, who later became known as Dixiecrats and today are the conservative wing of the Republican Party, were successful with a variety of laws that disenfranchised African Americans.

Even with the few African Americans who could get through the labyrinth of laws that included blank sheet registration forms, literacy tests and poll taxes the scare tactic employed by too many candidates was to suggest that their opponent was a lover of black people — but using a derogatory term. That fear of black people has its roots back to the centuries where black people were enslaved and brutal enforcement and fear were used to keep them that way.

The Civil War did not resolve the feeling between blacks and whites, and slave codes were replaced with Jim Crow laws that whites could use to assert supremacy over black people.

COMMENTARY

For a candidate to take a position that could be interpreted as being favorable to African Americans would mean almost certain defeat at the polls. Only Supreme Court decisions and federal laws like the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act created a more level political playing field between the races. Continued efforts to suppress the votes of minorities and to unnecessarily complicate the voting process are still employed by some trying to maintain a structured society of white supremacy.

More recently those who want to keep or expand their political power have swept immigrants — whatever their status — into the realm of those who are to be feared and suppressed from participating in the democratic process.

Many strive to gain maximum political advantage through whatever means while at the same time wanting to keep the appearance of respect and patriotism. The recent television ad with scary images and references to fear and the MS 13 gang intends to scare voters into rejecting a compassionate medical doctor with an ad that fact checkers have found to be untruthful.

Another concern from the current campaign is the suggestion from a white female candidate for lieutenant governor that her black male opponent does not understand the issues well enough to discuss them “intelligently.” Disregarding the excellent academic credentials of her opponent, her comments had the tone of the past that one observer said seemed more appropriate for 1957 than 2017.

At the national level, there are daily statements and actions that hearken back to the racial climate of the Old South. This year in Virginia, we have a unique opportunity on Nov. 7 to make a statement with our votes that we reject the discrimination of the past. It is always important to vote, but it is more important than ever this year. Despite efforts to romanticize the Old South and the Confederacy, we need to learn the truth and understand why we need to move on.

Boosting a Child's Self-Esteem

A positive self image is a lifelong gift.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL

One of the greatest gifts that a parent can give a child is a healthy self-esteem. Positive feelings about oneself can lead to success in a gamut of situations ranging from school to social circles, say child development experts.

"Self-esteem plays an important role at all stages of our lives," said psychologist Stacie B. Isenberg, Psy.D. "As adults, it can affect how one approaches situations and interacts with other people. When self-esteem is low, it may, for example, affect work performance or one's ability to recognize and enjoy accomplishments."

Parents play an essential part in the development of their child's self-esteem, advises Cheryl Giacomelli, who teaches psychology at Northern Virginia Community College. "Parents foster self-esteem in many ways including leading by example, being emotionally available, engaging with their children, and providing a loving and supportive environment that allows children to succeed and fail," she said.

Parents can model this behavior in everyday tasks. "For example, while helping a child with a math assignment and not understanding the math problem, the parent who says 'I can't believe I don't understand this, I was always terrible at math' is sending a different message than the parent who says, 'I'm not sure about this one. Let's ask your teacher to explain it to us in a different way,'" said Isenberg. "Parents can benefit themselves and their children by learning to describe situations according to the specific circumstances and resisting putting a generalized label on the situation or their behavior."

Since children learn by observation, modeling healthy relationships and habits is a vital component of developing a healthy self-esteem, suggests Giacomelli. "Choose an activity once a day in which you are fully engaged with your child," she said. "This may sound like common sense, however in today's busy world, it's sometimes difficult to devote all of your attention to one task. This means playing a game or reading a book and ensuring your cell phone is nowhere in sight."

"Experiences that may negatively impact the development of a strong sense of self occur when we do not fully engage with our children, when we do not allow our children to fail, and when we do not acknowledge our own faults," continued Giacomelli

Avoid harsh criticisms and display expressions of love, warmth and affection, advises Joanne Bagshaw, PhD, LCPC, professor of psychology at Montgomery College-Germantown.

"Children's self-esteem develops based on how well their parents love them," she said. "The best thing parents can do is to openly and unconditionally love and accept their child. Parents ... can do so verbally, by telling their children often that they love them and by being openly affectionate, with hugs, for example. Parents can also communicate warmth through their tone of voice, and eye contact."

PRAISING CHILDREN is important, but it must be sincere. Even setbacks can offer opportunities for developing a healthy self-esteem, suggests Isenberg. "Children feel good about themselves when they have received genuine, positive reinforcement from people and situations," she said. "Praising a child's efforts is one of the best things parents can reinforce, because a child can control his effort, whereas outcome isn't always within one's control."

One example that Isenberg offers is saying something like, "I'm so proud of how hard you studied for that science test. You spent a lot of time reviewing the material and were really dedicated to being prepared."

Allowing children to learn to do things on their own and even experience a setback within a supportive environment may increase feelings of confidence and competence, says Jerome Short, Ph.D., associate professor of psychology at George Mason University.

"Parents may do too much for children or protect them from failure so that children do not learn to cope with difficult situations and soothe themselves," he said. "Children should believe that they have worth for being a unique person."

Fostering opportunities for positive social interaction with their peers can lead to a healthy self-esteem, says Short. "Children who have close friendships and reciprocal sharing with friends tend to have higher self-esteem," he said. "Children's successful accomplishment of goals also boosts self-esteem."

Establishing boundaries and setting limits with children can instill a sense of safety and security, advises Short. "Authoritative parenting that is high in support and high in structure and expectations contributes to children's positive sense of self," he said.

All-day Fun at Harvest Happenings

The autumn air was filled with joy as children smiled and laughed at this year's McLean Community Center Harvest Happenings. All of the activities were geared towards children 3-8 years old. From a speedy baby pig to a magician, children could have fun with other children.

Squeals on Wheels, based out of Maryland, had children petting goats, chickens, pigs and alpacas. The Amazing Kevin, a magician from Stafford, had children in stitches after he created the illusion that a child was pouring milk from her finger.

Little ones got to meet Belle from Disney's Beauty and the Beast in a bright yellow dress. They could also paint and make arts and crafts with Abakadoodle Inc. a children's painting class from Falls Church. An egg race, photo booth and pumpkin patch were also part of the Harvest Happenings.

With McLean Community Center under renovation, the event was held at St. Luke's School in McLean.

Julie Thatcher, from Fairfax Circle, said this event connects people in the community.

Lydia Keffer from McLean says she loves the event because it is inclusive to all people, no matter your age or ethnicity.

Sue Dorsey from McLean said she is proud to do the event each year because "she sees the joy in [the children's] faces."

— ROBERT HEALY

Francisco Castillejos and his daughter Lucy from McLean pet the goats.

Lydia Keffer of Langley High school cheers on the Egg Race participants.

Sarah Merchak of McLean and her daughter get a glimpse of the Alpaca.

"Righty Tightly, Lefty Loosey"

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

So I've been told mnemonically for years. But when you're home and automotive-repair challenged as I am, everything is much easier said than done, especially when the mnemonic device is easier to handle/figure out than whatever tool and/or schematic is necessary/advisable for the at-home/in-driveway repair. (We don't have a garage, or much of a basement for that matter. It's more of a cellar, actually. In fact, I call it "the dug out," so lack of spatial accommodations can exacerbate the problem).

And that's sort of how I feel whenever I attempt a home/car-owner-type repair. Soon after I organize whatever thoughts and tools I might need: within minutes of the initial effort, I will have likely complicated the repair and will be forced to dig myself out, sometimes literally. I'll spare you the details, but suffice to say, I am a man of my word and that word is disaster. To invoke the great and often-quoted Dirty Harry: "A man's got to know his limitations," (Magnum Force, 1973), and believe me, I do.

Granted, replacing bulbs in my house, as written in the final paragraph of last week's column: "What To 'Ware,'" ranks pretty low on the home owner's list of honey-can-you-do?. Nevertheless, challenges do present themselves, especially when height and a ladder - or a step stool, with no spotter, are involved. And when I'm looking up with arms outstretched attacking the problem: light fixture from multiple angles, sometimes, when I place my hand on the bulb, I begin to lose my orientation and am unsure where's 'Righty' and where's 'Lefty.' And even though I always remember 'Tightly and 'Loosey,' when 'Righty Tightly, Lefty Loosey' doesn't immediately bring results, I tend to lose patience - and confidence, and slowly retreat to lower ground to reassess.

Unfortunately, there's no one to call. I mean, when you fail at the most basic and fundamental responsibility a home/car owner has, it's difficult, even for someone with as little ego as me, to admit abject failure. Repairing a toilet, installing light fixtures and/or ceiling fans; sawing, sanding, measuring, leveling and drilling; lifting, balancing and carrying; and anything else involving plumbing, electrifying; and even hammering and screwing in general, are tasks I don't mind asking and/or paying for. Having been down this road many times before, I know it's a path that won't lead to my redemption.

So not wanting to make a bad situation worse, or create a problem where one or two previously didn't exist, I have to employ the simplest of solutions. And what's simpler than "a pithy observation that contains a general truth:" an aphorism (Dictionary.com), an aid to one's lack of memory and ability to perform even the most basic of tasks, particularly as it pertains to a home owner: bulb replacement.

Not that this inability is at all defensible. It's not. It's totally indefensible and one whose defense is not all explainable by the most offensive of terms: cancer. Which as you regular readers know has been the bane of my existence going back to late February 2009. That's when my Internal Medicine doctor called me at work to share the results of my previous week's surgical biopsy. His suggestion was that we meet in his office to discuss the results. I shook my head in disbelief. If he wants to meet me in person, the results must be bad, I thought. Otherwise, he'd just tell me, right? I asked him to hold on as I found a private office for us to talk (me to react) and braced myself. He told me the growth was malignant and suggested I see an oncologist as soon as possible. An appointment was set for the following Thursday.

Much has changed in my life ever since that fateful day, but not as it concerns this home/car owner's inability to handle the most mundane tasks. Might have actually gotten worse. As for "the cancer," as "Forrest, Forrest Gump" described the cause of his mother's death, not so bad. I am alive and reasonably well, eight years and nearly two months out, six years plus past the end date of my original "13 month to two year" prognosis. Of that I'm proud. As for the home and car repair deficiencies, I couldn't care less. I have to admit though, it is laughable - and pathetic.
