Pay to Play or Legitimate Representation?

Senator's consulting business takes center stage in primary campaign.

BY MICHAEL LEE POPE
THE CONNECTION

Is two-term Sen. Barbara Favola (D-31) a rising star, poised to become chairwoman of a Senate committee if Democrats seize control of the Senate? Or is she an opportunist capitalizing on insider influence for personal gain?

That's a question for voters this June in a primary that pits Favola against challenger Nicole Merlene, who says Favola's consulting business is the embodiment of everything that's wrong about Virginia politics. The allegation centers on two clients of the consulting business: Marymount University and the Virginia Hospital Center, both of which are in the Senate district she represents. Favola says she recently took down the website of the consulting business because she is no longer seeking clients, and she denies doing anything untoward.

"I have never represented a client or an individual before a state agency, so I don't know how you can say this is pay to play," says Favola. "What I'm doing for these two organizations is very much internal to those organizations — raising scholarship money for students at Marymount, and the Virginia Hospital Center contract is over with. I helped them plan for mental health expansion."

On the campaign trail, the tension between Favola's ability to have a job helping businesses in her district and the potential ethical questions it raises have put a renewed focus on Virginia's system of government. It's a debate that erupted in dramatic fashion during the trail of former Republican Gov. Bob McDonnell several years ago, a trial that led to conviction and ultimately an acquittal by the United States Supreme Court. Now voters in Arlington, Fairfax and Loudoun have a choice to make about whether Favola's consulting business should be a source of concern.

"What I find really fascinating about the Favola versus Merlene race is that it looks in some ways a lot like the Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez versus Joseph Crowley primary of 2018, where a pretty well established and respected incumbent found themselves on their heels by a political newcomer who wasn't raising a lot of money but was able to tap into enough progressive voter frustration to win," says Quentin Kidd, political science professor at Christopher Newport University. "The similarities are striking to me, regardless of who wins this primary."

NICOLE MERLENE, 26, is a native of Washington, D.C., although she was raised in the Tara-Leeway Heights neighborhood of Arlington. She has a bachelor of arts in public policy with a minor in economics and a master of public administration, both from the University of Delaware. She's served on the executive committee of the Arlington County Civic Federation as well as the Arlington Economic Development Commission. Professionally, she spent several years as policy director for Invest in the USA, a trade association of small banks that make loans to distressed communities for economic development and job creation. On the campaign trail, she's been critical of Favola for being part of a pay-to-play culture in Richmond, where Merlene says the senator has been using her elected position to leverage her position in the legislature for personal gain.

"As much as we hoot and holler about Trump leveraging his position for the Trump International Hotel in D.C., apparently you're allowed to do that in Virginia," says Merlene. "We have an elected official who is breaking what in many other jurisdictions would be breach of ethics."

If elected, Merlene has a long list of agenda items she would like to accomplish. On transportation, she wants the General Assembly to facilitate a regional approach to bus transportation where neighboring jurisdictions would work together to coordinate routes and move passengers across Northern Virginia. On housing, she would like local governments to have more authority to require developers to deliver amenities that don't directly benefit the development. And on the environment, Merlene says she would like to see a regional recycling program for glass.

"Northern Virginia as a region can work together to do things like purchasing new technology that can do things like crush glass and turn it into pavement," says Merlene. "This epitomizes the Green New Deal because pavement is a carbon-intensive process to make."

BARBARA FAVOLA, 63, is a native of Windsor Locks, Conn. She moved in Washington, D.C., in 1980 and then moved to Arlington in 1983. She has a bachelor of science in political science and economics from the Saint Joseph College in West Hartford, Conn., and a master of public administration from New York University. Professionally, Favola held a number of different jobs in the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services as well as serving as part of the professional staff of the House Budget Committee under Chairman James Jones (D-Okla.). She was on the Arlington County Board from 1997 to 2011, when she was first elected to the Senate. During her time in the Senate, she founded a consulting firm known as Pathway to 21st Century Communities — a group that took on clients including Marymount University and the Virginia Hospital Center.

"I do not sit on any committees that have oversight or hospitals or universities," says Favola. "Nothing I have done — nothing — is by any stretch unethical."

During her time in the Senate, Favola passed legislation requiring the state to participate in a federal program providing resources to foster youth who exit the system at the age of 18. She worked on legislation expanding mental health services in Virginia public schools, and she passed a law requiring individuals to forfeit guns if they violate protective orders.

If re-elected, Favola says, she would like to expand access to early-childhood education and expand home visits of registered nurses

Four hundred and sixty-nine seniors received their diplomas at Langley High School's commencement ceremony on Monday, June 3 at DAR Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C. Approximately one-quarter of these students graduated with honors.

NBC 4's Aimee Cho imparted the students with her wisdom on making the most of the time after high school, urging them to "pick yourself up, dust yourself off, and get right back to it" when inevitable obstacles present themselves.

Cho is currently a multimedia journalist for NBC 4, writing her own scripts, and shooting and editing most of the material she puts on air. In college, she wrote for the Cornell Daily Sun as well as Ithaca College's TV station.

AS A 2013 LANGLEY GRADUATE, the perspective offered by Cho was especially personal to the students sitting in front of her. A member of the debate team and journalist for the school magazine, Cho was an involved and dedicated student.

"Langley prepared us well to go after our goals and open the doors to success," she reminded the students.

"Four years of ups and downs, four years of endless hours of homework... four years of cramming for tests, and doing the twenty-minute run in gym class," she reminisced, going on to tell a few personal anecdotes that had a hand in shaping her future.

Cho reminded the graduates that it's okay to feel unprepared for the "real world."

"By no means do I have life figured out ... I eat a lot of frozen dinners, I still need help doing taxes, and I have yet to parallel park my car in one try," Cho reassured the graduates.

In order to help the graduates be ready for the future, she advised them to be ready for obstacles, and to know how to use them to their advantage.

"There will always be unexpected distractions and setbacks," she said. "There will always be people who try to close the door and lock you out, but how you choose to respond to them is up to you."

Cho recounted several occasions of her own failure, and promised the class of 2019 that there will always be second chances and more opportunities.

"The first few months at NBC were rough," she admitted, "they felt like one big closed door."

Not only did Cho once make NBC 4 the last to cover a story because she forgot where she parked her car, she also faced the defeat of missing a deadline and causing the station to scramble for something to air.

"I felt like quitting, but stayed determined to press on," she said. "Although my shift ended at five o'clock, I regularly stayed til 9 p.m. to practice shooting video and editing."

Since then, she has never missed a deadline.

Cho wrapped up her speech with her big takeaway: "In school or at work we will all encounter obstacles, doors to opportunity that seemingly won't open. Pry those doors open. Kick them down," she urged. "All you need is a tiny crack in the door, enough for you to shove your foot in and keep that door open."

SHE ENCOURAGED the graduates to always remember to have patience.

"If you keep at it, you'll be able to squeeze yourself through the door and prove that you belong on the other side," she assured.

As she watched the students commence their high school careers and enter the world with endless opportunity, she advised the students to seize control of their own destiny.

"One day you can even build your own building with your own doors," she said. "And when that time comes, you can be the one to open the door for someone else."

Lessons from the Greatest Generation

Reflections on the 75th Anniversary of D-Day.

BY SUPERVISOR JOHN C. COOK
BRADDOCK DISTRICT

Thousands of young American soldiers boarded ships in England destined for the beaches of Normandy, France 75 years ago. Allied leaders planned the first-of-its-kind invasion for months. They designated five main beaches for the attack and named them Utah, Omaha, Sword, Gold, and Juno. On the morning of June 6, 1944 high winds and rough waves made for a difficult journey to Northern France for the 5,000 ships and 11,000 airplanes carrying 150,000 Allied troops.

The weather was far from perfect for an operation, but General Dwight Eisenhower could not risk the Germans spotting the massive military presence on the coast of England. When Allied Forces landed, they were met with a barrage of fire. Nearly 2,500 Americans died in history's largest air, land, and sea invasion. Despite the treacherous terrain and heavy casualties, Allied forces broke through German lines and liberated the Gallic Coast. The pivotal victory allowed the Allies to secure the Western Front and begin a liberation campaign towards Germany.

On the 75th anniversary of this momentous military victory, we are compelled to remember not just the heroism of the troops, but also their virtues of service of sacrifice of that generation. The harrowing actions of these servicemembers deserve the greatest respect and deepest gratitude. They showed courage, tenacity, valor, and honor in the face of incredible dangers and challenges. As Tom Brokaw eloquently put it, "They answered the call to help save the world from the two most powerful and ruthless military machines ever assembled." This anniversary should also prompt all of us to emulate the Greatest Generation's immense sense of duty and willingness to serve. Nearly every American in World War II found a way to support their nation during the conflict. Thousands of men volunteered to serve in the Armed Forces. Women supported the military in many different ways. Families nationwide planted victory gardens and volunteered for local groups that supported the war effort. Women also took industrial jobs in armament factories. In Burke, Va., residents volunteered 24/7 with the Aircraft Warning Service by staying in a watch tower to look out for enemy planes.

Today our nation faces many challenges. But a nation that could win two World Wars can also successfully meet the challenges of today. The spirit of the Greatest Generation is here to guide us.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gun Violence As Public Health Crisis

To the Editor:

For almost 20 years I have been fighting for better gun laws in Virginia — laws to prevent the unspeakable horrors that we saw in Virginia Beach on May 31, 2019 when a gunman with two .45 caliber handguns with high-capacity magazines murdered 12 people and injured many others.

At times, I have felt like it was an exercise in futility — that I was simply banging my head against the wall. No matter how sensible the proposal introduced, it would be killed in committee by Republicans and a few rural Democrats and never even make it to the floor for a vote.

We might have 20 people testify in support of bills including victims of gun violence, law enforcement, and the medical community; yet the voice of one gun industry lobbyist opposed to the measures would be the only one that mattered.

After the shooting at Virginia Tech, there was a slow movement towards change — at least among Democrats. It was a movement that accelerated in the aftermath of the shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School that left 26 little children and educators dead. Rural Democrats aligned with the majority in their party and started speaking out about the need for stronger laws to curtail the carnage. In fact, many Democratic candidates at even the highest levels of government began to run on the issue vowing to fight for sensible gun violence prevention measures if elected. Those Democrats won including most recently, Governor Northam, Lt. Governor, Fairfax and Attorney General Herring. And it should be no surprise. Polling tells us that as much as 90 percent of the public is in favor of stronger gun laws such as expanding background checks.

So, with the public and a Governor who clearly supports gun violence prevention measures, why can't we affect change? Because the GOP is in control of both chambers of the General Assembly and they continue to kowtow to the gun lobby instead of taking the decisive action that would make the Commonwealth safer for us all. Take the 2019 session for example. Democrats introduced dozens of firearms bills including ones to expand background checks, ban assault weapons, limit high-capacity magazines, cap handgun purchases to one a month, and to keep guns out of the hands of domestic violence abusers. Republicans defeated them all.

Gun violence has become a public health crisis in Virginia and across the country. But it is an epidemic that we know how to treat. Stronger gun laws won't prevent all senseless acts of violence but they will save lives. To get the stronger laws we deserve, we must vote for candidates who are more afraid of another horrific shooting than they are of the gun lobby and at this juncture, only the Democrats can stake that claim.

The proposals already exist. We

Why I Celebrate Eid

To the Editor:

Eid-ul-Fitr is an Islamic holiday which marks the end of the month of fasting, Ramadan. Muslims celebrate Eid by spending time with family and friends, eating good food and exchanging gifts.

I like Eid because I get a lot of presents from my family and friends and I get to wear new clothes. The prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) told us that on Eid we should take a bath, wear new clothes or our best clothes, and wear perfume. On Eid day I wear my new clothes and go to the mosque for Eid prayer. After the prayer I meet my friends and wish them "Eid Mubarak," which means blessed Eid. My favorite part of the day is when I open all my Eid presents, play games with my cousins and eat delicious food with my family.

PTSD: Recognizing and Healing

During PTSD Awareness Month, clinicians work to raise awareness, treatment options.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL

“They took all my clothes and made me walk naked for two days so I couldn’t escape,” said one woman. “They kill people over nothing,” said another.

These are the descriptions from Latina immigrants of their experiences as they were smuggled from Mexico to the United States. These women and others like them often experience rape, assaults, and gun violence, said Carol L. Cleaveland, PhD, Associate Professor of Social Work, George Mason University.

In a recent paper, “An Exploratory Study of Latina Immigrant Trauma,” she and co-author Cara Frankenfeld, PhD, also of George Mason University, spoke with patients at Mason and Partners Clinic in Springfield, Falls Church and Manassas Park who described events that often left them with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). During June, which is PTSD Awareness Month, mental health professionals are working to raise public awareness of the disorder and a knowledge of the treatments available to those who suffer.

There is often a lack of understanding which makes it difficult to identify said Cleaveland. “PTSD is a shift in how people think, feel and behave in response to a traumatic event they experience. It’s something that induces profound terror,” she said.

“[Symptoms include] intrusive thoughts and memories of the traumatic event, such as thinking about the event when you don’t want to, having flashbacks or having a strong emotional reaction to a something that reminds you of the trauma,” said Joanne Bagshaw, PhD, Professor of Psychology at Montgomery College.

A person experiencing PTSD might avoid people or experiences that remind them of the trauma, said Bagshaw. “You [can experience] negative thinking about yourself and the world, such as having traumatic expectations or detaching from relationships.”

Managing and healing even severe symptoms is possible with the right strategies. “There are several very good treatments for trauma,” said Bagshaw.

Among these healing methods is Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), a form of psychotherapy that teaches how to cope with dysfunctional emotions, behaviors, and thoughts. Another therapy is Eye Movement Desensitization Reprocessing (EMDR) which involves a patient briefly focusing on the traumatic memory under the guidance of a trained clinician and ultimately experiencing relief.

“There is research which shows EMDR is highly effective in desensitizing the trauma,” says Cleaveland.

Therapeutic riding is an emerging therapy that has not been studied extensively for PTSD. “[It] is teaching people to ride and work with horses with the goal of improving their physical or mental well-being,” said Olivia Taylor, Program Director of Northern Virginia Therapeutic Riding Program (NVTRP). “One of the biggest benefits we see for our riders with PTSD is that riding puts them in the moment, focused on creating a bond with their horse. They’re not thinking about past events or being hypervigilant, but feeling peaceful in the moment.”

For those who have strained interpersonal skills related to trauma, such as the ability to trust others, therapeutic riding provides a safe space for working on that proficiency, Taylor said. “Horses are empathetic, non-judgmental creatures, so therapeutic riding provides a great opportunity to work on building a trusting relationship with another living being,” she said.

As an example, Taylor points to one NVTRP rider who suffers from debilitating and life-disrupting anxiety resulting from PTSD. “Over several weeks of riding, she has developed a very strong bond with the horse she rides,” says Taylor. “They share an especially close relationship, and she credits the trust she has in him with her ability to overcome her fears of riding and progress more than she’d ever imagined. We find that this sort of trust and openness to an empathetic relationship carries over into riders’ lives beyond the farm, helping them to rebuild healthy lives.”

Chesterbrook Elementary School, Carson Middle School, Cooper Middle School, and Longfellow Middle School are among five schools statewide to earn the 2019 Governor's Award for Educational Excellence, the highest recognition in the Virginia Index of Performance (VIP) awards for advanced learning and achievement. The VIP incentive program recognizes schools and divisions that exceed state and federal accountability standards and achieve excellence goals established by Virginia's governor and the Board of Education.

Recipients of the Award for Educational Excellence must meet all state and federal achievement benchmarks, achieve all applicable excellence goals for elementary reading, enrollment in Algebra I by the eighth grade, enrollment in college-level courses, high school graduation, attainment of advanced diplomas, increased attainment of career and industry certifications and, if applicable, participation in the Virginia Preschool Initiative.

Barricade in McLean Ends in Arrest

A man is in custody following a barricade situation that ended around 12:30 a.m. on May 29. Officers were initially called to the 6300 block of Old Dominion Drive around 4:30 p.m. on May 28 after a family member reported an assault. The victim was able to leave the house. A 25-year-old McLean resident refused to come out and barricaded himself in the home.

Patrol officers contained the scene while crisis negotiators and tactical officers responded. After eight hours of working to peacefully resolve the situation, the man was taken into custody, uninjured. He faces charges of assault and violation of a protective order.

or social workers to low-income new mothers. Her top priority would be passing a bill that would allow for debt-free community college for people in certain fields like early-childhood education, teaching, nursing, cybersecurity and artificial intelligence.

Favola says a pilot program limited to Northern Virginia would cost about $25 million.

"We have 45,000 jobs that are unfilled, and many of those jobs do not require a four-year degree," says Favola. "They require a highly technical skill set, which we apparently are not really producing here in Northern Virginia."

Fact Checker's Three Tips for Managing the Post-Graduate Future

BY ANNA KARL
THE CONNECTION

Five-hundred and thirty-eight McLean High School seniors graduated on Monday, June 3, at DAR Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C. One-hundred and seventy of these students were honor graduates.

"Time goes by in the blink of an eye," editor and chief writer for the Fact Checker column of the Washington Post, Glenn Kessler, warned the students seated before him.

Kessler joined the graduates in the celebration of their new chapter with a powerful keynote speech. The occasion was extra special, he noted, because his daughter, Mara, was a member of the graduating class.

In addition to his eight years of work for the Fact Checker column of the Washington Post, Glenn Kessler Kessler has had numerous beats, ranging from airline safety to Wall Street correspondent to chief State Department reporter over the past 30 years.

"You will experience more freedom than you've ever had before," he said. "Freedom to experiment, to explore, the freedom to make mistakes."

KESSLER urged the graduates to make the most of this new freedom, and to make every moment count.

To those going on to higher education, Kessler said, "too many students go to college thinking only of their future careers. But college is not just about careers. You go to college to hone your ability to think critically and creatively. That's what will help you to get a job and excel at it."

Glenn Kessler delivers the keynote speech at McLean High School's 2019 commencement ceremony.

To those who plan to enter the workforce now, Kessler said, "remember that you can never stop learning."

Kessler recalled when he told his father he wanted to be a journalist. Instead of receiving support and advice, he was met with the question: "How are you going to make a living by doing that?"

While this inquiry made him angry and upset, he chose to make it his driving force. Kessler became determined to prove him wrong.

"You can't plan on the future. You can't plan on success. It often depends on luck, fate, timing, and the occasional dash of voodoo," he joked. And with that, Kessler offered the students three tips for managing the future.

"First, have a clear sense of your goals. Two, don't be afraid of failure. And three, find your passion."

He recounted the numerous goals he stuck to throughout his journey. "I've had a terrific career because I never lost sight of my goals," he said.

"You may not always have the success of meeting your goals. Many of you may not have goals yet. But it is important to develop goals, both for the short and long term."

When it comes to failure, Kessler urged the students to not hide from it, but to embrace the lessons it presses upon them. He reminded them that every successful person has experienced failure to get to where they are now.

"You will learn more from your failures than your successes," he said. "If you have not failed at something, it often means you have not taken a chance."

HE ACKNOWLEDGED that not every job is going to be incredible, and many will not be rewarding financially or intellectually. However, if you find something you are personally passionate about, you are destined for success.

"The key to success is not an IQ score, and certainly not your SAT score," he reassured the students. "It's about having passion and being hardworking, demonstrating perseverance even in the face of failure, about keeping your eye on the goals you set for yourself."

Kessler left the graduates on a serious note, reminding them to be responsible in their consumption of information in the rapidly changing world.

"Newspapers and news shows once provided Americans with a common point of reference," he noted. "Now, we are increasingly sorted into ideological cul-de-sacs, able to decide if we want our news slanted left or right."

"Diversify your social media feeds," he encouraged the graduates. "You will learn more from people who challenge your assumptions and preconceived notions."

Most importantly, Kessler says, "It's your turn now. Congratulations to the class of 2019."

Going Solar in McLean

Open house demonstrates the advantages of solar energy.

BY NADEZHDA SHULGA
THE CONNECTION

On Sunday, June 2, a homeowner from McLean, Rick Harwood, opened the doors of his residence for a community open house to share his experience of going solar.

While Virginia solar farm projects are the focus of intense controversy, the use of solar energy for private housing is gaining interest. The topic is getting more popular every year. That's why experts from Mountain View Solar, a solar installation company, organized the open house to showcase solar power.

Harwood installed his solar system in December 2018. "I have been thinking about this for a long time," he said. "Solar is cleaner than coal. It's even cleaner than natural gas. We expect to get a reasonable economic return." The total price of the solar installation amounted to $25,000. The federal solar tax credit allowed to deduct up to 30 percent of the price.

"The payback period is expected to be 10 years and return 7.5 percent. To be honest, my stock portfolio doesn't do better than 7 percent per year. In an economic sense, we are doing great," Harwood said.

Even though the "fuel" for solar power is limitless and free, its intensity varies throughout the year and from season to season. Harwood shared the stats for the last few months. In the dark and gloomy winter months, the system produced 15 kilowatt-hours of energy per month which was not bad, but yet below average. In May, when summer finally arrived, the system harvested three times more. As expected, it almost zeroed Harwood's electricity bill. The sunniest days are ahead.

"The good news about solar panels is that it is a 'setup and forget' kind of system. Being fully autonomous, it transforms sunlight into pollution-free electricity at no cost, day over day, year over year," added Danny Chiotos of Mountain View Solar.

The system is basically your own mini power plant. It is able to send excess energy to the grid and reduce electricity bills. Harwood estimated that "the system should save more than a hundred dollars per month this summer."

"The system is designed to handle strong winds, heavy snow, and even hail," added Shane LaBrush, a consultant from Mountain View Solar. "Everything is covered by warranty and insurance".

On May 19, St. John's Episcopal Church invited the public to an exhibit of landscape photography and to view recently completed interior and exterior renovations. The Art Show and Open House, organized by St. John's Education and Community Life Committees, brought together parishioners, neighbors, local artists and long-time church members who returned for the event.

Renowned local photographer Robin Kent shared more than 25 images, including views at National Parks, the Great Falls and the Chesapeake Bay. "Blue Ridge Parkway, North Carolina" features the Milky Way; "Star Trails, Sonora Pass" is a combination of 30 images, each shot for more than 4 minutes. Recent improvements to the St. John's interior include a two-story entrance foyer overlooked by a second-floor balcony. The regraded exterior drive has a water-permeable surface, and new walkways give better access from the parking lot to the front entrance. The outdoor Woodland Chapel, partially encircled by the new Columbarium, provides an alternative worship space with permanent seating. Originally a rural Sunday School located near what is now the CIA, St. John's has been a fixture of the McLean community since 1866. The "Church on the Hill." has been at its current site since 1956.

Jamie Wang pitching in 2019 game vs. Bullis School

McLean Athlete Named Softball Player of the Year

In its 34th year of honoring the nation's best high school athletes, The Gatorade Company announced Jamie Wang of National Cathedral School as its 2018-19 Gatorade District of Columbia Softball Player of the Year. Wang, a resident of McLean, is the first Gatorade District of Columbia Softball Player of the Year to be chosen from National Cathedral School. The award, which recognizes not only outstanding athletic excellence, but also high standards of academic achievement and exemplary character demonstrated on and off the field, distinguishes Wang as District of Columbia's best high school softball player. Wang is now a finalist for the Gatorade National Softball Player of the Year award to be announced in June.

The 6-foot senior right-handed pitcher led the Eagles (10-6) to their fourth straight District of Columbia State Athletic Association championship this past season. Wang compiled a 10-4 record with a 1.79 ERA, along with a .560 batting average and 22 RBI. She struck out 168 batters in 97.2 innings pitched. The DCSAA Player of the Year, Wang was also a First Team Washington Post All-Met selection. Also a talented artist, Wang has volunteered locally on behalf of the Special Olympics and youth sports programs.

"Jamie Wang is very poised and commands the mound as a pitcher," said Donna Stallworth, head coach at Georgetown Day School. "She's very confident at the plate too and she's been a driving force for her team."

Wang has maintained a 3.76 GPA in the classroom. She will attend the University of Pennsylvania this fall. In the future, Jamie wishes to combine her interests in STEM, sports, and art. As a Benjamin Franklin Scholar at the University of Pennsylvania School of Engineering and Applied Science, Jamie plans to major in Chemical Engineering and Materials Science to develop safe sports equipment and other life-saving technologies.

From Weak To Week

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

For the next six weeks or so until mid-July when my bi-monthly CT scan reminder arrives in my inbox, I am on easy street/living the life of Riley. The email will confirm time and place when scans – and face-to-face appointments with my oncologist, are scheduled. Reminders which I really don't need.

I mean, my life is at stake here. What kind of moron ("Why? Are there more than one kind?" to quote Curly Howard of The Three Stooges.) forgets/neglects medical appointments related to one's life when death is looming?

And death for me has been looming since late February 2009. That's when an (now my) oncologist dropped the figurative hammer on Team Lourie after a nearly two-month pursuit to determine the truth for just us: "Non-small cell lung cancer, stage IV," with a "13-month-to-two-year" prognosis.

Talk about devastating news. To say we were all stunned does a disservice to the word "stunned."

To invoke Yoda from "Star Wars," speechless we were.

That was a long time ago, however, and much has occurred. The details of which are somewhere between being lost in the ether and lodged in my brain, generally retrievable should the need arise. A need which I often have when writing this column but one which doesn't manifest itself too much in my daily activities.

Yes, I have cancer, but I try not to make a big or central thing about it. To say, "It is what it is" isn't meant to trivialize the overwhelming nature of a "terminal diagnosis;" it's more an attempt to compartmentalize it somehow. (I just hope the compartment has an infinite amount of space. Otherwise, I fear I'll be in trouble fairly soon.)

But not for the next six weeks. For the next six weeks, I am on cruise control. I will be going about my regular business without too much emotional interference.

I wouldn't exactly say I'm on cruise-control/"passenger" in a self-driving car, but I am able to function without consulting the manual.

This "honeymoon" is as good as it gets for a patient whose life is lived from one diagnostic scan to the next, not knowing, generally, if the you-know-what has hit the fan. It's the sword of Damocles on steroids.

But what else is new?

For a cancer patient? Not much.

This is the life, a life which for us fortunate few, we have to live, despite the initial words to the contrary spoken by our respective oncologists – who were consulting the manual: If patient "X" presents with such and such then his/her prognosis is so-so.

Just last week, my oncologist told me the average life expectancy "for lung cancer patients is one year." And even though I've lived an unexpected life – and met many others who likewise have lived beyond expectations, his assessment of my fellow lung cancer "diagnoses" was still horrifying. (Why not me? I think there's been a misspelling somewhere.)

Misspelling or not, I'll go on pretending life in the cancer lane, as bumpy and in as need of repair as any you can imagine – or have read about in this space, goes on without further adieu, so to speak.

My philosophy has been: "Until they tell me otherwise, and even if they do ... " I have tried, and hope I will continue to try, especially if the future news is not so good, to not become a victim of my own circumstances. And though I have occasionally received some discouraging news, I have tried not to give in to it.

"It's nothing until it's something and even if it's something, it's still could be nothing." That's how I roll.

For the past 10 years plus, I've rolled along managing the "slings and arrows" of my outrageous misfortune: a life-long non-smoker with no immediate family history of cancer diagnosed with an incurable form of lung cancer.

Lucky me. You bet I am.

Alive and reasonably well a decade after the hammer came down.

Kenny Lourie is an Advertising Representative for The Potomac Almanac & The Connection Newspapers.
