Grassroots activists hold a going out of business banner on the sidewalk across the road from the National Rifle Association in Fairfax during the July 14 protest against gun violence.

At the end of the July 14 protest at the National Rifle Association in Fairfax, gun violence prevention activists Kris Gregory of Falls Church and Nancy Despeaux of Reston discuss ideas for getting Northern Virginia residents who have moved to update their voter registration status in time for the Nov. 5 General Election.

‘Sensible Gun Legislation’ Rejected Again

Local activists reaffirm their commitment to gun violence prevention movement.

BY MARTI MOORE
THE CONNECTION

On July 14, more than 75 concerned people who oppose gun violence in Fairfax turned out to protest at the National Rifle Association. More motivation came from the July 9 failed special session of the Virginia General Assembly, when Republican lawmakers adjourned in record time without considering any proposed legislation.

Passing motorists heading to and from Oakton on a Sunday afternoon beep their car horns and give thumbs-up gestures in support of the protesters, who line the sidewalk at 11250 Waples Mill Road on a hot summer day July 14 — which marks their 79th consecutive vigil for the 20 school children and six adults fatally shot Dec. 14, 2012 at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Conn.

The anti-gun violence activists are used to having their firearm safety bills shot down in committee soon after the Virginia General Assembly regular session starts each January.

“We’re always hopeful,” says Del. Kenneth “Ken” R. Plum (D-36t) of Reston at the monthly NRA protest, “but realistic.”

THE JULY 9 special gun session called by Gov. Ralph S. Northam was no different, as state lawmakers adjourned early with no floor votes on the governor’s package of eight proposed gun safety measures. Plum said the General Assembly adjourned just 90 minutes after the session started at noon.

A week later, Kris Gregory of Falls Church said the most important fact to concerned citizens like herself was every delegate and state senator in the Virginia General Assembly had to vote to adjourn. It was a party-line vote to end the special session July 9 and the Democrats were outnumbered by the Republicans.

“It’s such a cowardly way to do it,” points out Plum, who is the longest serving member of the Virginia House of Delegates.

Most gun violence prevention activists believe the NRA controls the Republican majority. Gregory attended the July 9 “Votes and Laws” rally held that morning by Moms Demand Action For Gun Sense in America before the legislative session started. She said buses chartered by Brady United Against Gun Violence left Richmond at 1 p.m. before a scheduled 2 p.m. gun rights rally held at the Old Bell Tower. She explained the Virginia Capitol Police requested both sides hold their rallies separately.

Gregory noted at the NRA protest she and more than 500 activists of the gun violence prevention movement statewide were in Richmond July 9 to get a message out to elected officials, “not to provoke the Second Amendment advocates.”

She and other protesters learned about the outcome of the special session on the bus ride home through text message from Brady staffers, who stayed in Richmond.

THE GOVERNOR said July 9: “I expected lawmakers to take this seriously. I expected them to do what their constituents elected them to do — discuss issues and take votes.”

“An average of three Virginians die each day due to gun violence,” Northam said. “That means hundreds of Virginians may die between today and Nov. 18, the next day the legislature plans to work.”

According to the state government website, lawmakers agreed to meet again after the Nov. 5 General Election. Gregory makes it clear she and other activists are working to elect “gun violence prevention champions here in Virginia” on Nov. 5. They are united in heeding a call Gov. Northam has made to Commonwealth voters for more than a year: “If you can’t change their hearts, change their seats.”

Richmond or Bust

Early on a Tuesday morning at a commuter parking lot in Woodbridge, Springfield resident Earle Mitchell waits his turn to board one of three motor coaches chartered by Brady United Against Gun Violence — on the way to Richmond July 9 for a “Votes and Laws” rally before noon at the state Capitol. They urged Commonwealth lawmakers to pass “sensible” firearm safety laws designed to prevent future deaths from gun violence before the start of a Virginia General Assembly special session that ended as quickly as it started.

Mitchell started volunteering for gun violence prevention causes more than six years ago, when 20 school children and six adults were fatally shot Dec. 14, 2012 at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Conn. Mitchell said he served 28 years for the U.S. Navy and worked as a defense contractor. The 82-year-old activist says he supports universal background checks and believes “Virginians want more gun control.” Before boarding the Brady bus, Mitchell affirmed — no matter the outcome in Richmond — he would continue writing letters to lawmakers and newspaper edi-

National Night Out

BY JOHN C. COOK
BRADDOCK DISTRICT SUPERVISOR

Every Year neighborhoods, police departments, fire departments, and community groups across the country come together for a night of games, food, and community building on National Night Out. Neighborhoods, pools, and community centers host bar-b-ques, block parties, and festivals where police officers pay a visit and mingle with civilians. Children have the chance to meet McGruff the Crime Dog, see emergency vehicles, and give a police officer a high-five. Meanwhile adults and parents can share a burger with an officer and talk about safety concerns or even just the latest Nationals game. This night is about strengthening the bonds that make our community safe and happy.

National Night Out, which takes place on Aug. 6, is far more than just a celebration. It is a beneficial learning experience for all parties involved. Children learn that police officers are not just there to arrest people, but to protect and serve their neighborhood. Adults and parents get to personally know the officers in charge of protecting their families. Community groups, such as Neighborhood Watch, can educate their neighbors on their mission and even recruit some to join. Lastly, officers get to meet and better understand the people they serve, thereby improving their service to the community. When this type of communication takes place, we all benefit and actively make our neighborhoods safer in the process.

I will participate in National Night Out once again this year with the police from West Springfield District Station. I always enjoy visiting the many neighborhoods of the Braddock District in a police car with one of our fine Fairfax County Police Department Officers.

In fact, National Night Out is the perfect time for neighborhood leaders to print and hand out copies of the Fairfax County Community Emergency Response Guide (www.fairfaxcounty.gov/cerg). From there, they can start a conversation with police officers about preparing for emergencies with a special focus on safety. Events like National Night Out bridge the communication gap that prevents civilians from learning all they can to prepare for emergencies.

Community groups, such as Neighborhood Watch and the Community Emergency Response Team, will also be present to speak to about getting involved. As a community leader I am always happy to see people coming together. There's something special about National Night Out.

In a time where trust in societal institutions is at a dangerous low, National Night Out offers a solution in a positive and enjoyable reprieve from the negative news cycle. Events like this are vital to encourage strong and trusting relationships between first responders and the communities they serve.

The free ice cream is a very big perk as well.

Honoring Molly's Gift

BY LORI BRIGHAM
WASHINGTON REGIONAL TRANSPLANT COMMUNITY

It was a Friday morning, and as the sun rose over the Lincoln Memorial more than 100 members of the United States Coast Guard gathered on the sixth floor of George Washington University Hospital. They came to say goodbye to their shipmate Molly Waters, who lost her life after a motorcycle crash. Molly, a Coast Guard Commander, spent 16 years rising through the ranks and lived to serve. Now even in death, Molly served others since she had made the selfless decision to register as an organ donor. As Molly was brought from the intensive care unit to the operating room to donate her organs, her shipmates, family, friends and hospital staff lined the hallway, a growing tradition known as an "Honor Walk." We stood silently in the weight of the moment, collectively mourning such a tragic death and expressing our gratitude for the generosity of this ultimate act.

Last year in the United States more people than ever gave the gift of life by donating their organs upon their death. This isn't the type of record that makes headlines. But it should be. Organ donation and lifesaving transplants can only occur when individuals like Molly and their families realize that even in death they can make a difference and become

That story is one of generosity and inspiration that has led to steady increases in organ donations and transplants. Organ transplants in the U.S. saw their sixth consecutive record-breaking year in 2018, with an 18 percent increase in deceased organ donors between 2015 and 2018. The 10,721 deceased donors last year meant 29,680 transplants for people waiting for an organ. Here in the D.C. metro area, we are part of this story, too. Last year, our organization surpassed our own record recovering and allocating 474 organs from 137 generous donors, which saved the lives of 401 people.

At Washington Regional Transplant Community (WRTC) located in Falls Church, we work every day to help save more lives through organ donation. Our job is to educate medical professionals and the public about organ donation; facilitate the recovery of organs, match them to waiting patients and deliver them to transplant hospitals; and support donor families before, during and after the donation process and help honor the legacies of their loved ones. We work in close partnership with six transplant centers and 44 hospitals to decrease the number of patients waiting for a lifesaving organ. WRTC is one of 58 organ procurement organizations (OPOs) across the U.S. Our singular mission is to save lives through organ donation and transplantation and, as a community, we are working toward the day that no one dies waiting for an organ. The unfortunate fact today is that with more than 113,000 people on the national transplant waiting list, the need for a donated organ far outpaces availability. And while increased public awareness and willingness to be a donor is essential, that alone isn't enough. Only three in every 1,000 people die in a way that allows for the possibility of organ donation.

OPOs are working to improve these odds. We are pursuing positive changes to federal policies that govern organ donation and transplantation, including promoting the use of organs from more complex donors, improving clinical support, providing OPOs access to donor hospital health records and addressing transplant center reimbursement and evaluation policies that might be a disincentive to otherwise successful organ matches.

Additionally, at WRTC, we realize the power of scientific and medical research and its ability to save lives and heal patients. Therefore, deceased donors can donate organs and tissues, unsuitable for transplants, to far-reaching medical research and therapy initiatives. In 2018, WRTC allocated 92 organs for research, which ranked seventh in the nation.

The system for organ donation in the U.S. is complex and highly regulated, providing a strong infrastructure and successful track record from which to build. At WRTC, we are privileged to play a role in this system and are committed to working with our local and national partners to make it even stronger and more successful. We honor those who have embraced organ donation as an act of human kindness to inspire others to register as donors too. We encourage you to make the legal and informed decision to be an organ donor.

Magic at Richard Byrd

Fairfax County Public Library summer events continue with magic show.

BY ABBY SACKS
THE CONNECTION

The Richard Byrd library hosted a music and magic show titled “Showtime at Your Library” on July 11 as part of the Fairfax County Public Library free summer events and reading program. “Showtime at Your Library” was designed for children ages 6 to 12 and featured magician Steve Somers performing magic tricks and incorporating books into his act to showcase the magic of reading. When he made a rabbit appear in a wooden box, Somers spoke about “The Tortoise and the Hare,” and when he recounted his experience learning magic he compared himself to “The Little Engine That Could,” trying and trying until he had mastered tricks. The importance of books and reading was an integral part of the show.

Though magicians never share their secrets, Somers told the kids in the audience that they could learn how to do all of the stunts from his show by reading about them. “How do you do these tricks?” he asked them. “It’s in the library. You can read how to do these tricks.” Somers also traded the classic magic word “abracadabra” with the more venue-appropriate slogan of “read to succeed.”

To finish a trick, the magician would have the audience recite his magic words before the flick of his magic wand. He closed his program with a positive message of maintaining good character to achieve your goals. “If you want to be a star, it starts with what’s on the inside,” he said. “When you’re kind... When you read to succeed. When you listen to your teachers. You can do anything when you’re a star.” Praveen Kurup attended the show with his wife and school-aged son. This was his family’s first time at a library event. He chose to go because his son likes magic and thought this would be enjoyable for him. But he found himself and his wife having fun as well. He called the experience “funny for the adults” and “good for the kids.” After enjoying “Showtime at Your Library” so much, Kurup said he would be interested in going to another library event soon.

Summer events at libraries for elementary-aged kids include performances with music, magic, animals, and more. Each Fairfax County branch has different offerings, which can be found on their websites. According to Delia Ullberg, the Youth Services Manager of the Richard Byrd library, “family programs and storytimes are popular” and “younger kids tend to be more interested” in library events. Despite this, libraries do offer workshops and programs for teens and young adults as well. In addition to events, the libraries also have an ongoing reading challenge called the “2019 Summer Reading Adventure.” Kids from birth to high school can participate by reading a certain amount of books and logging them online or on paper by Aug. 31. People who have read enough win a coupon book with vouchers for fun things to do locally, including mini golf and ice cream. So far this summer, Ullberg said 288 kids have completed the adventure. Summer library events continue through the end of August at all Fairfax County branches.

Redefining Springfield Identity

County revitalization office is working with local officials on new getaway signs.

BY MIKE SALMON
THE CONNECTION

Moving forward in Springfield, the newest revitalization efforts are new gateway signs that visitors and prospective residents will see as they come into the community. Officials and residents recently got together at the Springfield Town Center to share ideas and look at options for Springfield.

The new gateway sign effort is being called a “civic branding project,” being done through a partnership with the Fairfax County Revitalization office, the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce, Springfield Civic Association and Springfield Town Center. A community-based steering committee has been formed that includes the Monticello Woods Civic Association, Springvale Civic Association and county staff.

The county says the signs are being updated “to raise the visibility and reputation of Springfield as a great place to live and do business,” their website read.

The project came about as result of a study recommending that Springfield’s commercial area would benefit from a unified identity and branding. The project also includes a new logo for the area that was developed last year.

Fairfax County is funding the design, construction and installation for the branding signage, banners and other graphic elements. County, civic and business leaders are working with Merje, an environmental graphic design and civic branding firm, to create the designs.

Among the 34 people that showed up at the meeting were Marcus Wadsworth from Supervisor Jeff McKay’s (D-Lee) office, Gail Nittle, President of the Springfield Civic Association, a representative from the Virginia Department of Transportation, and Rodney Lusk, a candidate for Lee District Supervisor.

“Residents and business owners were excited that Springfield will finally be defined, have an identity that will highlight the strong central business district we have here,” said Kimberly Clarke, President and CEO at the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce.

Possible locations for the signs include:

- ❖ Old Keene Mill Road, near Springfield Plaza
- ❖ Backlick Road, near Brookfield Plaza.
- ❖ Franconia Road, near Springfield Town Center.
- ❖ Frontier Drive, near the Franconia-Springfield Parkway.

Supervisor McKay has been through a few phases in Springfield’s revitalization and progress has been made with the town center, the plaza, the new government buildings near the town center, and transportation enhancements. He was also around years ago when the first signs were posted under then-Supervisor Dana Kauffman and sees the significance of the signs. “Creating recognizable images that identify our community create a sense of togetherness of which we can all be proud,” he said. “Though just one step in the revitalization process, it’s a major one.”

There is a survey being sent out to residents before a final decision will be made on the new signs.

Senior Living

Drinking plenty of non-alcoholic fluids like water, even if you're not thirsty can help prevent heat related illnesses.

Beating the Heat

Seniors at greater risk for heat-related illnesses.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
THE CONNECTION

With the sunny days of mid-summer come sweltering heat. This week's heat indexes topping 110 degrees in some cases illustrate that July and August are the hottest months of the year, according to the National Centers for Environmental Information.

Soaring temperatures may have the greatest impact on those who are over the age of 65.

"They are more likely to have a chronic medical condition that changes the normal body's responses to heat," said Amy Vennett, BSN, RN, Program Manager and Nursing Case Management for Arlington, County. "Older adults don't adjust as well as young people to sudden changes in temperature. They're more likely to take prescription medicines that affect the body's ability to control its temperature or sweat."

The physical, cognitive and social changes that happen as one ages, make one more susceptible to illnesses related to extreme heat, says Ingrid Parkhurst, Center Nurse Coordinator and Gerontologist for the Fairfax County Health Department. "So, when it comes to the heat, we need to think about all three perspectives. Physically, older adults might overheat, sunburn and dehydrate more easily given changes to their bodies. Cognitively, older people are more likely than the general population to suffer from some mental decline, [and] they may not be able to communicate their needs in the heat as readily, leaving them open to dehydration and heat-related illnesses."

Vennett says that the signs that might signal the onset of such an illness include "Heat stroke, heat exhaustion, heat cramps, sunburn, and heat rash."

Local counties offer help during times of extreme heat, says Brian Roberts of the Montgomery Health and Human Services Department. "Anyone who needs to get out of the heat can take advantage of the cooling centers like senior centers during normal business hours."

Staying indoors during the hottest parts of the day, is the most obvious way to prevent illnesses, says Vennett. "If you do spend time outside, wear lightweight, loose-fitting clothing. Drink plenty of non-alcoholic fluids like water, even if you're not thirsty."

"Stay ahead of your thirst," continued Vennett. "On days with heat advisories, take sips from a water bottle all day. If you feel sick, see your physician. Older adults can have multiple health problems at once, and dehydration can affect any of these."

Some older adults go through social changes that could leave them isolated and unable to seek help before reaching the point of an extreme heat-induced illness, says Parkhurst. "That is dangerous because if they do not have social connections it will be harder for them to access the care they need, especially in an emergency," she said. "Those who are isolated or lack the physical ability to drink adequate amounts of water or recognize thirst are at greater risk. And, dehydration easily leads to urinary tract infections in older adults."

Keeping it Chang

Restaurant review: Mama Chang.

BY ALEXANDRA GREELEY
THE CONNECTION

Recently opened in Fairfax, the immense and glittery Mama Chang restaurant is part of the metro area Peter Chang restaurant empire. Immense, yes, as it apparently can seat up to 200, which will not surprise any patron coming in at mealtime. There could be a wait, and when a table clears, folks may walk through a crowded area with waitstaff dashing around carrying meals.

And apparently the “mama” does not really pertain to Peter Chang’s mom, but is more or less a general, catchall name to reflect assorted female family connections.

Stopping by for dinner, patrons may be mystified by the lengthy dinner menu with so many offerings—from small bites, to “family style” to small plates, that making some final choices could be challenging, particularly because some offerings may not be at all familiar to Chinese foodies. (Note: According to the restaurant’s web page, the dishes reflect Hunan, Szechuan, and Hubei flavors and recipes.)

Take, for example, the dry chili pork intestines or the home-made fish ball in pickled chili soup. The Chang family must be on a crusade to educate the average Western consumer’s palate; though obviously their Chinese compatriots know what the offerings are.

But for those patrons looking out for more familiar dishes, good news—crispy duck spring rolls, roast pork belly bun, pan-fried noodles with vegetables, and Chang’s roast duck all provide familiar tastes and textures.

One of the must-have offerings, and one that is relatively familiar sounding, is the scallion bubble pancake that looks as large as a blown-up balloon, and apparently is a number 1 seller here. Delicious and tender, and probably one order can feed two to three people, it comes with a dipping sauce and chopsticks so patrons can dunk their pieces into the sauce before eating it.

And as for a main course, the best bet is to scan the “family style” section of the menu, where entrées to feed a party of three or more are listed. There’s bean curd, and braised beef stew, and smoked pork belly. But one of the most robust dishes is the lamb and fish ball stew—the broth is mild, the fish balls are doughy tender, and the lamb comes in long, tender strips.

The interior is airy and bright with many windows brightening the room and pale, bamboo-colored tables and booths. That, too, is underscored by the artfully presented dishes—on bamboo platters, steaming hot pots, and pretty ceramic ware. The staff is super friendly and eager to answer questions from baffled patrons who may not understand what are some of the offerings.

Mama Chang, 3251 Old Lee Highway, Fairfax. 703-268-5556. Hours: Mon.-Thurs., 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., 5 p.m. to 10 p.m.; Fri.-Sat., 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Sun. 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.

PEOPLE

One Small Step Man's greatest journey continues to inspire.

BY JEANNE THEISMANN
THE CONNECTION

It was one small step taken 50 years ago. Around the world, eyes were collectively riveted to grainy pictures on a television screen as others gazed up at the sky in wonder and awe. America had conquered the impossible: A man was on the moon.

"I remember that night vividly," said Paul Lockhart, a retired NASA astronaut and longtime Fairfax Station resident. "It was a clear night in Texas and I was outside with my friends thinking 'Wow! There is somebody up there about to step onto the moon.' It was very exciting."

Lockhart's fascination with space exploration began even earlier, when he watched the space launches of the early '60s.

"One of the few things that all the news networks covered at the time were the space launches," Lockhart said. "I was 5 or 6 and the idea of the unknown really captured my imagination. At the same time, I had an aunt who was a trailblazer in her own way – she was the first female CPA in the state of Texas and flew in open biplanes so she was a bit of a risk taker. She kept putting books on exploration, like Lewis and Clark, in front of me so along with those early space flights I knew this was something I was interested in."

A NATIVE OF AMARILLO, Texas, Lockhart received a BA in mathematics from Texas Tech and a master's in Aerospace Engineering from the University of Texas at Austin. He was commissioned in the U.S. Air Force in 1981 and flew as a test pilot for the F-16 aircraft when he was selected as an astronaut candidate in 1996.

"NASA is a part of our national character. It is recognized and respected around the world and represents the best of what America is."

— Space Shuttle Endeavour astronaut Paul Lockhart

Fairfax Station resident Paul Lockhart, second from left, as Pilot of the crew of the Space Shuttle Endeavour in December of 2002. With him are Commander Kenneth Cockrell and Mission Specialists Franklin Chang-Diaz and Philippe Perrin.

Lockhart's two space missions, STS-111 and STS-113, both in 2002, were missions to the International Space Station aboard the Space Shuttle Endeavour. He piloted the STS-113 mission in December of 2002, the last shuttle mission before the loss of the Space Shuttle Columbia and its crew the following February. The Commander of that mission, Rick Husband, was a childhood friend.

"Rick was from my hometown and we knew each other in high school," Lockhart said. "Although we all know the risks it was a hard loss and since I had just completed two shuttle missions, I felt the time was right to leave NASA and return to the Air Force."

Lockhart retired from the Air Force in 2007 and returned to NASA in an administrative position. He currently works as Director of Engineering for PEMDAS Technologies and Innovations, a woman-owned, service-disabled veteran-owned Small Business.

As the 50th anniversary of the first moon landing is celebrated on July 20, Lockhart believes we still have more to learn from space exploration.

"I think space exploration is vital to who we are as a nation," said Lockhart, noting that the last moon landing took place in 1972. "Space technology is critical and has such wide-ranging consequences. Every time you use your phone, every time you watch a satellite feed, every time someone uses an ATM or is rushed to the hospital in an ambulance – much of that is traceable back to the sciences that NASA developed."

While many are focused on putting a man on Mars, Lockhart believes there is more to learn before that can happen.

"I believe the right thing to do is return to the moon," Lockhart said. "While the technology is there, there is still so much that we don't know about deep space flight. We need to develop the capabilities and resources that will allow us to eventually reach Mars but more importantly return safely."

AS AMERICA CELEBRATES the imagination, dedication and courage that united the nation and conquered what had once seemed impossible, Lockhart added without any hesitation, "The decision to do this program took the same resolve and willingness to assume a high level of risk that our forefathers did when they signed the declaration of independence in 1776 and again in 1944 when America and its allies executed Operation Overlord: D-Day."

Lockhart credits the Apollo program as one of America's greatest examples of risk undertaking.

"We commenced a project that was technically very difficult, fraught with uncertainty and outcome and achieved remarkable success within a very ambitious timetable set by President Kennedy," Lockhart said.

"It was truly a national effort as there were tens of thousands of Americans working on the project, either for the government or at major corporations and even small mom and pop businesses."

And for Lockhart, July 20, 1969, captured everything a young boy would be interested in.

"I wasn't sure how I would get there, but my path to NASA was about trying to do something significant," Lockhart said. "I believed then and believe now that NASA is a part of our national character. It is recognized and respected around the world and represents the best of what America is."

“Come On Down!”

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

Except I was not sitting in the audience for “The Price Is Right” when I heard my name called.

Nor was I needing to guess the cost of my infusion with my treatment that day contingent on my guess not exceeding the “actual retail price.” And neither were there any of “Barker’s Beauties” to wave their hands and showcase what items I would be attempting to price right.

No. There were only multiple oncology nurses standing in front of the Infusion Center’s entry door calling out the names of the next patients lucky enough to begin their treatment.

It wasn’t exactly “Plinko,” but once inside the Center, the fun, such as it is, really begins.

At least that’s the way the activity appeared to me. The preceding day was July 4, and the Center was closed forcing those Thursday patients to be rescheduled to either Wednesday or Friday. As a result, the waiting area was particularly full with patients, along with their family and friends – all of whom are encouraged to attend.

In the midst of this crowd, I sat and waited. We hadn’t exactly been assigned numbers, but we were assigned oncology nurses and therefore could only enter the Infusion Center with their assistance.

Then, with all of us “waiters” looking at the entry door, waiting for an oncology nurse to walk through and call our name, the door lock clicked open and out walked two oncology nurses. As soon as they cleared the door and entered the waiting area, they called out their respective patient’s names (unfortunately not mine).

Upon hearing their names, the two patients and nearly half a dozen of their supporters got up and moved eagerly toward the entry door. It reminded me of the beginning of “The Price Is Right” when four audience members’ names are called in quick succession and implored to “Come On Down!” by George Gray (Johnny Olson, the original announcer, retired years ago) and officially become one of that day’s contestants.

However, once inside the Infusion Center, it’s dead serious.

Your life is at stake, maybe even at risk, depending upon your cancer/treatment, and at this point, you’re not playing any more games (although occasionally, you may be guessing the price of things and wondering how it all gets calculated). So, you slide into your Barcalounger, hold out your arm to have your bar-coded wristband scanned and prepare for your hopefully, life-saving infusion – don’t smoke ‘em, even if you got ‘em.

It’s rare that you’ll see your oncologist in the Center.

Typically, they’ll be seeing patients in examining rooms, performing surgery or rounding in local hospitals. But they’re always a phone call away should the nurses need any additional instructions or clarification.

Generally speaking, once inside the Center, all goes as anticipated for us patients: you’re in, you’re treated, you’re out. And when you’re out, new patients names are called and on and on it goes, just like “The Price Is Right,” except the program doesn’t end in an hour.

And just like “The Price Is Right,” where there are no shortage of audience members wanting to participate, at the Infusion Center, likewise, there seems not to be a shortage of patients wanting to be treated either. (Granted it’s not exactly the same thing, but you get my drift, I’m sure.)

Cancer is not fun, nor funny, and an Infusion Center is not filled with anticipation of cash awards and magnificent trips. There is however, lots of empathy and understanding - from your support system and from staff as well.

But it’s the last place you want to be, unlike “The Price Is Right.”
