Suicide and Trauma Sound Alarm for First Responders

Fairfax County Chief of Police takes action to relieve stress and encourage officers to ask for help when needed.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Fairfax County Chief of Police Colonel Edwin C. Roessler Jr. is out to end the silence and stigma that surrounds the issue of mental health in first responders.

“Across this nation, death due to suicide in first responder profession is outpacing line of duty death... And that is not ok,” said Chief Roessler Jr. during a Meet & Greet presented by the Police Department Aug. 13, and held at the Public Safety Headquarters in Fairfax.

During the event, Roessler and Jay Carson, Director of Incident Support Services Fairfax County Police Department (FCPD), launched the department’s new program to combat suicide and reduce stress after exposure to trauma during critical incidents. Trauma and stress can lead to PTSD and depression.

Roessler and Carson introduced the department’s new Service Dog Program and the initial five First Responder Canine (FRK9) puppies assigned to the Incident Support Service Section. The dogs will be deployed to reduce the effects of a traumatic event, including fear and anxiety, for first responders and community members and participate in other areas.

“It is my goal, as your Chief of Police to lead an effort here in Fairfax County, across the nation, and around the globe to get rid of the stigma of mental health. One of our themes is, it’s ok, not to be ok. It’s ok to seek help,” said Roessler. Roessler explained that the department had formed a partnership with FRK9, a nonprofit organization that provided the department with five purpose-bred puppies and their associated costs, including veterinary care at no charge. According to FRK9’s founder, Roger Giese, FRK9 had fielded a total of 14 Golden Retriever and Labrador retriever pup-

FCPD has five puppies from 4-8 months of age, currently being trained by their FCPD handlers. Named after fallen officers to honor those who have served and protected the community, the Service Dogs in Training (SDiT) introduced to the public were Holmes, Jack, Indy, Sully and Lennie. “I’m proud to be here with Second Lieutenant Christopher Sharp, Media Relations Bureau: “From the moment Jack and I started this journey; it was evident how happy people were to be around him, even if it was just for five minutes. ... That brief encounter, the moment when everything else is set aside, and it’s just them and Jack, provides a glimpse of the immeasurable impact he has.”

Jill Molley, Clinical Psychologist FCPD: “When Holmes is with me, detectives pause what they are doing and spend a few minutes with him. They instantly smile and gather around him. ... Holmes ‘changes the subject’ when he shows up, which is a nice break from their stressful work.”

Colonel Edwin C. Roessler Jr. Chief of Police: “As a chief of police I value innovative methodologies to provide all first responders with the knowledge, skills, and abilities to end the mental health epidemic in our professions. ... As I watched officers respond happily to the puppies deployed in our agency over the first seven months in their positive wellness habits, it became an easy decision to become part of the program to assist me in my day-to-day struggles so I partnered with Indy... Indy is teaching me more than I am training her on all aspects of wellness as we continue forward for her to one day serve another first responder.”

my K9 partner, Indy,” said Roessler.

ROESSLER said the department’s K9s could help support officers and the community at the onset of critical incidents in the field, as a preemptive stress release, and also provide 24/7 emotional support for first responders: police officers, firefighters, dispatchers, sheriffs and deputies in their time of need, when they suffer a disability and have to retire. Roessler added: “We will have a core of K9s that will provide them the support for their Post Traumatic Stress... It is our goal to provide mental health services so we can eradicate suicide and make everybody better to get back into service in a community.” Matt Giese, Director of Operations for FRK9, thanked the FCPD Incident Support unit and all the members within the department for the partnership. Giese explained that two of the FCPD Service Dogs would stay on in the department to deploy during Potentially Traumatic Events (PTEs), “to help further assist those in the community who are suffering from things that occur catastrophically, unfortunately on a daily basis,” said Giese. The dogs would help de-escalate the often-strong emotions and stress that come with these events.

ACCORDING TO FCPD, in addition, the dogs would play a role in fostering community relationships with trips to neighborhoods, schools, local events, etc. All the dogs will go through a two-year training program to meet the Americans With Disabilities Act requirements for service dogs. The other three dogs would go to disabled first responders.

“One of the things we plan to do over the course of the next two to three years is to dispatch thirty of these highly-skilled, highly trained, loving animals to first responders in need, said Giese. He added that FRK9 would need continued and ongoing support because everything to date they funded themselves. “If you are willing or interested in helping with what we are doing here in Fairfax and beyond, please go to frk9.org and reach out,” said Giese.

COMMENTARY

Helping Start the School Year Safely

By JOHN C. COOK
BRADDOCK DISTRICT SUPERVISOR

Parents are smiling and children are sighing as the summer days come to an end. It's as apt a time as ever for us to review the safety precautions and changes that come with Back to School Season. It is everyone's responsibility to make sure the school year starts off safely for our children.

Fairfax County Public Schools will start on Aug. 26. More than 1,700 buses will be on the road, making it particularly important that you know the schedules. Elementary schools start and end times vary. They start from 8:10 to 9:20 a.m. and end from 2:55 to 4:05 p.m. Middle schools begin 7:30 a.m. and end 2:15 p.m. Three secondary schools (Hayfield, Lake Braddock and Robinson) begin 8 a.m. and end 2:45 p.m. High schools begin 8:10 a.m. and end 2:55 p.m. I would advise you to check the Fairfax County Public Schools website to check when your closest elementary school starts and ends. All commuters should prepare to leave a few minutes early to avoid back to school commuting.

When a school bus is stopped with red flashing lights, all cars must stop unless they are in another lane divided by a median.

If you are traveling in a two-lane roadway with no median, all cars in both directions must stop when the bus is loading or unloading.

Drivers in all directions must also stop when driving in a two-lane roadway with a center turn lane or in a four-lane roadway without a median separation.

The only time you can continue driving when a bus is stopped is if you are driving on the other side of a physical median.

It is important to remember that many children will be walking to school and to neighborhood bus stops. Please yield to children crossing the streets, look out for crossing guards and follow their instructions. Keep your car off the crosswalk when stopped. Be prepared to stop for children who may make unexpected movements into roadways and follow the school zone speed limits when the signs are flashing. Most school zones have a 25-mph speed limit, but they may vary.

Parents, please remind your children about street, pedestrian, and bus safety. Try to get to the bus stop early to prevent injuries caused by rushing to the bus. If you are crossing a roadway, make sure that cars are stopped in both directions before crossing.

Teach them to use designated crosswalks if they are available and only approach the bus once it has come to a full stop.

If you have young drivers in the family, take time to review the rules about school zones and school buses. If you drive your kids to school, use the kiss and ride process. Do not drop off children on the street—you create a safety hazard for other vehicles when you do.

Whether you have children in school or not, it is everyone's responsibility to follow traffic laws and help start the school year safely.

Where Are You From, Originally

To the Editor:
 “Where are you from?” That question has always confused me. When I answer Northern Virginia, I am rebutted with: “No, where are you originally from – like where is your family from?” I bleed red, white and blue...and green? Yes, that’s right. I’m a proud Pakistani-American Ahmadi Muslim. Pakistan has given me a lot. It has provided me with culture and a means to stand out. I take great pride in being trilingual. These unique qualities help me stand out from a billion other individuals.

The United States established diplomatic relations with Pakistan following the country’s independence in 1947. America has a multi-faceted relationship with Pakistan in areas ranging from anti-terrorism to energy to trade and investment. The only thing Pakistan hasn’t given me is the freedom to express my religion. In Pakistan I am not allowed to call myself a Muslim because I am from a sect that believes Hazrat Mirza Ghulam Ahmad, the 19th-century founder of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Community, is the long awaited

Messiah and that he has come to revive the religion and bring us back to the path of righteousness when the religion needed it the most. The second amendment states that Ahmadis are a non-Muslim group. Since 1974 members of my community are being persecuted and accused of violating the country’s controversial blasphemy laws. This is also why I am so thankful to call America my home — a country that allows me to thrive however I want. With a hijab on my head and with strength in my blood, I am able to live my dream of going to medical school and becoming a physician so that I can give back to the country and to humanity. So now whenever I’m asked “where are you originally from?” I ask the same question. The amount of melanin in your skin or the kind of clothes you chose to wear don’t make you any more or less American. Your country is, in the end, the people that live in it. Sure, you might have an association with the geographical location but it’s the people as a whole that give you an identity. I love my Pakistani roots and I love my American identity. Both parts have shaped me into the headstrong and ambitious woman that I am today. God bless America and Pakistan

Zindabad.

Jaelyn Wheeler is helping her children transitions from a care free summer to structured school year.

Back-to-School Anxiety

Easing in to the new year.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL

After summer camps and a vacation abroad, Jaelyn Wheeler is easing her children into the new routine that they will face later this month when they return to school. She's purchased school supplies and created and laminated a schedule of activities for before and after school. "They've been staying up until the wee hours of the morning, but I've been getting them to bed early and waking them up early," she said. "I've bought organizational supplies from the Container Store to help organize their desks at home so they have a clear workspace for doing homework."

When months of swimsuits, summer camp and lazy days turn into early rising, classroom desks and school bells, many families will feel the shock of a sudden shift in schedule. Faced with the reality of nightly homework, the need to perform well academically and the peer pressure that often comes with returning to school, many parents and children can feel anxious about starting a new school year.

"Children often worry if they will be able to cope with the demands of their new grade, said therapist Carol Barnaby, LCSW-C. "Will they be smart enough? Will they disappoint their parents? Will their teacher like them? Will they fit in with their peers? Will they be bullied? Will they be good enough to make the sports team? The worries can go on and on."

The increased pressures of perfectionism in both academic and extracurricular endeavors can feel daunting, especially after an easy-going summer.

"The social stressors of fitting in, being included [and] being accepted combine to create stress that is only increased by social media," Vicki Kirsch, Ph.D., LCSW Associate Professor of Social Work at George Mason University. "It's not only the difficulties of finding a group to sit with in the cafeteria, but also now criticism and bullying through social media."

As children approach adolescence, peer pressure can intensify such stress, suggests Linda McKenna Gulyan, Ph.D., Professor of Psychology at Marymount University.

"In fact, new school year stress for school-aged children is usually more tied in with pressure to make friends, fit in, wear the right clothes, shoes and backpacks and who will be in their class," she said. "For parents, stress relates more to their expectations of school performance and other school or extracurricular activities."

Parents can comfort and support their children by acknowledging and validating a child's angst, says Gulyan. "Listen to their concerns and anxieties about social relationships. Help them ease into the transitions," she said. "[Their anxiety] will probably be relieved after a day or two. For younger students it might help to check in with the classroom teacher about these concerns, then drop him or her an email."

As Wheeler did with her children, Barnaby encourages parents and children to develop and discuss the new daily routine to create a concrete awareness of the shifts that are about to occur. "Gradually easing into the schedule can help kids cope with stress and encourage a return to routines, she said. "That includes eight to ten hours of sleep each night, turning off and putting away electronic devices 60 minutes before bed, eating healthy meals and spending time together talking about plans to manage the demands of the new school year."

Managing such stress should include more than academics, like unstructured free time suggests Barnaby. "Try not over schedule children with too many activities," she said. "Create calming spaces in the home to unwind. Sit quietly with your child to just be together. Try a guided meditation. Make time to talk about how things are going, what things are going well and what things they are finding challenging."

Learning and practicing self-care at an early age is a useful way to manage stress, advises Kirsch. "[It's] perhaps the best way," she said. These tools are always with us and the only requirement is to practice self-care skills to increase their effectiveness. Deep, focused breathing, meditation, and mindfulness are all ways to manage stress. People often confuse these three techniques with each other, but they are individual skills that can overlap but can also be practiced separately."

"For example, one can do a regular activity such as washing one's hands or walking to the bus stop in a mindful way by focusing in the present and examining experiences utilizing the five senses. "What am I seeing, smelling, touching, hearing, and tasting?" continued Kirsch.

Gulyan encourages students to focus on the joy they will feel when they are reunited with their friends. "Keep in mind that most other kids are a little stressed and scared about back-to-school stuff, too," she said. "But now you are a grade higher and definitely ready for the next year."

Painting the Sounds and Vibrance of Music

Workhouse Artist Britt Conley's knack for expressing music with her brush strokes.

BY MIKE SALMON
THE CONNECTION

Ever since she was the drummer for the "Beatnik Flies," at age 15, visual soundscape artist Britt Conley has incorporated music into her life in a variety of ways, including paintings. Now in her studio in Building 10 at the Workhouse Arts Center, Conley gets the music in her head and puts it on canvas with her brush.

"I spend months personifying what the music would look like," she said, to "translate the beauty."

Most of her work is with classical music, and she recently landed an award for her painting called "Tchaikovsky Symphony Number Six," at the Arts Club of Washington. "It's the composers brain," she said, looking at her painting which hangs on the wall outside her studio. "I personify the music in many different ways," she said.

The piano work of Chris Ziemba is another musician's work she has painted. In October, Ziemba is coming to her studio for a show and will play that music as the audience looks at the same song as a painting in Conley's studio. "This is one song," she said, pointing at several pieces of Ziemba's music on a canvas arranged on the wall. Another painting she calls "My Guitar, My Artist Britt Conley is explaining the painting of Chris Ziemba's piano work. Ziemba is coming to the Workhouse with his piano in October.

Muse," has actual guitar strings in it.

Conley taught herself to play drums at an early age. In the 1980s when "new wave" hit the music scene, she was right there in the Beatnik Flies, getting into all the hot groups back then – Black Flag, the Dead

Kennedys, B-52's, and others, and they played at the 9:30 Club in D.C. as well as a few other live music venues.

"We were the opening act for a lot of bands," she said. "Every once in a while, we'd go on a mini tour," and her parents were alright with it, surprisingly. "It was a totally different era," she said. That phase lasted for a few years and then she took to the paintbrush.

A few of her pieces are not paintings of the classical music genre. The Foo Fighters' "Run," is one of her paintings on display outside her studio. The song is about a senior running away from an old folks home, she said. As she had that song playing on her MP3 player, she painted. The song played "over and over, the whole time," she said. On the canvas, there are images representing the keyboard, melody and guitar riffs.

Her combination of music and art seems to work within the walls of the Workhouse, which used to be Lorton Reformatory, a federal prison. "The light makes me want to create," she said. A former prisoner came in one day and they talked about the transformation. "He came to my studio and said 'this is where I used to be,'" she said.

Conley has an art show coming up in September, the piano player in October and the masquerade ball in November.

Small Market With 'a Little Bit of Everything'

Sunday mornings at the Lorton Farmers Market.

BY KHUYEN DINH
THE CONNECTION

Sunday mornings at the Lorton Farmers Market are bustling with locals and regulars who enjoy local produce and the community that comes with the market. Because of the tightness of the market, multiple vendors describe the community as a family as they describe not only their fellow vendors but their customers as well. The Lorton Farmers market provides a wide variety of choices, such as Lebanese Food, fresh baked scones, and multiple stands of local produce. "This market has a lot to offer. It is a small market but you'll find a little bit of everything here," stated Nancy Ochoa from Ochoa Produce.

The appeal to farmers markets is growing due to the appeal of "farm to table" living. "The appeal to farmers market is growing. Farm to table, local, more sustainable," says Weber. "Also, you can get better deals at farmers markets a lot of the time. Things are a little cheaper and there is a personal touch when you get to know who is growing it."

Not only do customers enjoy the locally

Crowded with customers regular and new, the three produce stands that appear at the Lorton Farmers Market are filled with conversation and fresh produce. "It is a smaller market so you get to know all of the vendors. We always interact with them," says customer Curtis White.

grown produce, they enjoy getting to know exactly who is growing their food. "We love fresh and local," says customer Curtis White. "We like to get our produce as close to the vine as possible. We like to be able to meet the farmers and meet the people producing the food. It is one of our kids favorite things to do." Many families are regulars at this market. Weber estimates that the market's customers is about 70 percent regulars and 30 percent new customers.

This market has been described as a relatively smaller market but most say that this allows for a strong community feel.

The market is organized through Fairfax County; there are several markets in the Northern Virginia area that are organized by Fairfax County including one in Burke.

Open each Sunday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., this market does not truly get busy until later in the day when church is over for most families. During the off-season, vendors apply through Fairfax County so that the types of products can be considered based on the variety and the needs of the customers. "We have lots of regulars and we like to give them preference," says market manager Kimberly Weber. "To give the community feeling of the market, you want familiar faces. A lot of the vendors actually go to other markets as well but people come back for the familiar face so that they get to know who is growing the products that they love so much. We do have new faces here such as the popsicle vendor and a coffee roaster." Everything in the market must be locally grown.

Patty Repko and her husband own PattyBakes which has been a regular at the Lorton Farmers Market for a while now. "We get mostly regulars and most of our clientele shows up every week," says Repko. "The vendors are all really friendly, we are just one big family." The stands are constantly bustling with conversation between vendors and customers. This market also has several produce stands that are very popular among customers. "We have built a lot of regular customers that are like family now," says Ochoa.

"Barbasoul"

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

That was a close shave, if I may euphemistically characterize my most recent, blade-free brush with cancer-like symptoms, especially considering that I thought my life was at stake.

The pain was located around my left-side rib cage, exactly where the pain was on that fateful Jan. 1, 2009 day when I couldn't ignore it any longer and thus felt compelled to get off the couch and go to the emergency room.

Though I didn't have any shortness of breath, or difficulty inhaling, exhaling and bending over (all of which I had back then); nonetheless, I thought the worst and didn't fool around this time and made an appointment with my primary care physician as soon as possible, which was for the following day. I didn't have a great sleep that night but it was somewhat improved knowing I might get an answer the next day.

To say that my life was beginning to pass by is a bit of an overstatement to be sure, but it was moving around a little bit. Trying to bury/compartimentalize what a possible recurrence/resistance to my current standard of treatment would mean before I actually met with a physician and received cancer confirmation was the immediate task at hand.

Rationalizing that what symptoms I wasn't experiencing meant something positive/encouraging compared to what I felt 10 and a half years ago was one mental route I was traveling. The other was my usual and customary fall-back position: "It's nothing until it's something."

However, I have to admit "something."

Though I can't speak for all cancer patients/survivors; for me - in spite of my inherited-from-my-father positive attitude - being diagnosed with a "terminal" disease, as clearly described by my oncologist back in late February 2009, creates a sense of inevitability - as does the "13 month to two year" prognosis that followed.

Inevitability, as in one's demise (I'll never forget the walking-down-the-staircase-with-a-yo-yo example he used) and then death is only a matter of time. Time which you don't have and quality of life which you'll never get back.

And when that "inevitability" is most clear is when you have symptoms (related to your cancer or not; you don't know definitively, at least I never do), especially if those symptoms are identical to the ones that got you into this jackpot in the first place.

So yes, I've had a difficult few days fighting the inevitable feelings and wondering if my amazing good fortune had finally run out. After all, a "terminal" disease doesn't generally mean you go on living a normal life expectancy. Au contraire. It means you don't! And at some juncture, the cancer spreads beyond modern medicine's ability to manage it.

Then the patient is given a choice: stop the treatment and try to enjoy your remaining days without side effects, and thereby live a less cancer-centric quality of life with some freedom and independence - and hopefully feel some kind of better. And in those intervening days, try not to worry about the cancer doing what it inevitability (there's that word again) does, which is not cure itself. Or try some experimental treatment and hope for the best.

This is the emotional concern and challenge which hangs over my head. Never more so than when I have the symptoms that I did this past week.

Fighting the cancer and fighting these feelings is too much. One at a time I can handle.

Handle it I did as I sat in my doctor's office and in great detail, described my symptoms, and explained what I was feeling and what I wasn't. My internal medicine doctor listened intently as he has since the very beginning when I was first diagnosed. He was calm and reassuring in his assessment.

My symptoms he said were not cancer-related. They "were muscular," he continued, "on the outside of my lungs."

Not lung cancer at all. As such: No lab work. No X-Ray. No CT scan. No nothing. Another reprieve. Life goes on, until ....
