Mount Vernon Gazette

March 4, 2021

River Farm Offer Falls Short of Asking Price

NOVA Parks and partners made an offer but the farm remains on the market.

By Mike Salmon

The Gazette

In an attempt to keep the property open to the public, the NOVA Parks, Northern Virginia Conservation Trust, and their partners recently made an offer to buy River Farm in Mount Vernon, but the American Horticultural Society board of directors has voted to decline their offer, looking for their original asking price of $32,900,000 that they say they need to keep the society in operation.

“We deeply appreciate the interest of NOVA Parks in River Farm and their proposal to purchase an option on the property, which if exercised, would involve payments to AHS over several years. We deliberated carefully over the proposal and its terms and concluded that their offer as currently written simply does not meet AHS’s needs. So, with thanks to them for their interest, the board declined the offer,” noted AHS Board Chair Terry Hayes.

Paul Gilbert, the executive director of NOVA Parks, said their offer was “based on the appraised value,” and noted that the $32 million price is an unsupported value constructed on “completely unrealistic expectations,” he said.

Officially Speaking

Locally, elected officials have supported the purchase of the farm to keep it undeveloped. Earlier this month, Senator Adam Ebbin (D-Alexandria) and Delegate Paul Krizek (D-Mount Vernon) were behind a successful effort by both the Virginia Senate Finance and Appropriations and House Appropriations Committees to come up with the money. This included $2 million in funding to preserve River Farm in its proposed budget, and another $5 million in combined funding for the preservation of both historic Chickahominy tribal lands and River Farm.

Mount Vernon Supervisor Dan Storck (D) is anxious to preserve the farm too. “While disappointing, AHS’ decision is unsurprising,” Storck said. “We all remain committed to working with AHS to find a way to preserve this beautiful place of history nestled within the Mount Vernon community. I, personally, see this as part of the process you would find with any real estate sale. I remain hopeful that the AHS Board will support the criticality of preserving this historic property for the public and future generations. We know this commitment has been a long-standing mission of the AHS Board and its members,” Storck said.

The AHS Board says they will continue to review and consider offers and would prefer that the buyer of the property would maintain it for single use and not subdivide it, continuing to allow the public to access the property as much as possible. “The Board will continue to keep this option open to keep the property in its current state,” Storck said.

The mansion is a highlight of the farm.

A Board of Supervisors hearing is scheduled for later in March.

The riverfront location could make River Farm’s property attractive to a developer to subdivide and build expensive homes.
McEnearney Associates has always had one motto in mind... not to be the biggest, but the best. For more than 40 years, our Associates have lived in and supported Alexandria, helping to build our town into the thriving community it is today. To learn more about our Associates and our firm, visit www.WeAreAlexandria.com

#WeAreAlexandria

Old Town | $2,985,000
This iconic celebrated townhouse, circa 1852, is a historic gem that exemplifies fine quality and timeless elegance. Original floors, high ceilings, huge windows, four fireplaces, two staircases, 4/5 bedrooms, 4.5 baths, family room, office and wet bar, all awash in natural light. The bright kitchen with hand painted tiles offers large table space and a door to the patio garden which surrounds 2 sides of the house. A stunning crystal chandelier, gas fireplace, and tall east and west windows enrich the lovely dining room. An enormous family room with adjoining full bath and office area with built-in computer desks is 30 feet in length. Superior corner location on one of the most beautiful blocks in Old Town.
Babs Beckwith 703.627.5421 | www.BabsBeckwith.com
Lauren Bishop 202.361.5079 | www.LaurenBishopHomes.com

Waynewood | $999,000
Prepare to be WOWED in wonderful Waynewood! Beautifully renovated and expanded 5-level, 4-bedroom, 2.5-bath Mayfield situated on .36 acres with spectacular outdoor spaces to enjoy and entertain. 1108 Priscilla Lane
Alexis Bogdan 703.965.6556
www.AlexisBogdan.com

Alexandria | $749,000
This striking 3-4 bedroom end townhome, with fully above grade lower level, features an 8,000+ SF corner lot, 3 deeded parking spaces and brick-enclosed patio. Sparkling updates, 3-sides of windows, 2 fireplaces plus updated kitchen. 1723 Belle Haven Road
Ann Duff 703.965.8700
www.AnnDuff.com

Wellington Estates | $705,000
Welcome to 7954 Bolling Drive, the ideal investment property for a buyer to truly make it their own home. Opportunity to work with the current builder or bring in your own. List price includes plans & permits ready to be issued. Have a brand new home in Wellington Estates!
Jillian Keck Hogan 703.951.7655
www.JillianKeckHogan.com

Fairlington Meadows | $575,000
Jen Walker 703.875.1566
www.JenWalker.com

Lorton | $425,000
Beautifully updated 4-bedroom, 3.5-bath townhome conveniently located in Pohick Village. Hardwood floors on main level, updated kitchen, & spacious primary en-suite bedroom. Lower level features wood-burning fireplace. Relaxing patio. 7581 Aspenpark Rd.
Heidi Burkhardt 703.217.6009
www.RealtorHeidiB.com

Burke | $688,000
Carefully maintained split level in a lovely tree-lined neighborhood. 4 bedrooms, 3 baths, screened porch, deck, stone patio, and lovely backyard garden for outdoor entertaining. Primary bedroom with sitting room. Close to Burke Lake Park. 7308 Outhaul Lane
Mason Montague Bavin 703.338.6007
www.MasonBavin.com

Serving the Washington, DC Metro Area since 1980.
703.549.9292 | 109 S. Pitt Street | Alexandria, VA 22314 | McEnearney.com

Mount Vernon Gazette  March 4-10, 2021
High Time?

Advocates call on the governor to legalize marijuana as soon as possible.

By Michael Lee Pope
Gazette Packet

The debate over legalizing marijuana is about to light up, putting Gov. Ralph Northam at the center of a budding controversy. At issue is a question of timing. Should he agree with lawmakers that legalization should wait until New Year’s Day 2024, giving the Commonwealth enough time to stand up the new Cannabis Control Authority? Or should he amend the bill the General Assembly put on his desk to legalize weed now to prevent communities of color from being overpoliced in the interim?

“The governor has been talking about reparative justice for the communities and individuals harmed by the war on drugs and racially biased policing,” said Asha Khanha, legislative director for the ACLU of Virginia. “A way to make that big service reality would be to enact these changes now and stop the harm of marijuana prohibition.”

Last weekend, lawmakers emerged from a closed-door conference committee with a compromise bill that has angered many of the governor’s allies. Crafted in secret, the conference report put legalization on hold until a new regulatory agency can be created and commercial licenses issued. Advocates have been calling on lawmakers to separate the date of legalized possession and the start of commercial sales, but lawmakers who were part of the conference committee disagreed.

“There’s no legal marketplace. It would just be the illicit market,” said state Sen. Adam Ebbin (D-30). “We want to create a marketplace that has products that have been tested and not have additives and make sure that the people we’re selling to have been ID’d to make sure they’re 21 and older.”

THE ALEXANDRIA DELEGATION

is at the center of the debate. The two lawmakers leading the secret talks over the weekend were Ebbin of Alexandria and House Majority Leader Charniele Herring, who also represents Alexandria. Members of the conference committee determined that the best course of action would be for marijuana to remain illegal for now, still subject to civil fines and penalties. They also slapped a re-enactment clause of the regulatory parts of the bill, forcing lawmakers to consider any way he sees fit, and he has until the end of this month to take action. That means he’s now being lobbied heavily by advocates for criminal justice reform to legalize marijuana as soon as possible instead of waiting for the business dynamics to materialize.

“I’m extremely disappointed that we legislated business before justice,” said Chelsea Higgs Wise, executive director of Marijuana Justice Virginia. “The governor said that this bill was supposed to prioritize racial equity but it’s clear that it only prioritized a cannabis profit industry.”

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY session began with Northam calling on lawmakers to legalize marijuana, building on momentum from the decriminalization bill he signed into law last year. During his State of the Commonwealth address, the governor framed the move as an acknowledgement that Virginia’s criminal justice system treats people unfairly. He used his speech to spotlight some statistics showing Black people are three and a half times more likely to be charged with marijuana crimes and four times as likely to be convicted.

“It’s time to join 16 other states and make marijuana legal, and end the current system rooted in inequality,” said Northam in a speech delivered in a House chamber that was mostly empty because of pandemic precautions. “We’ve done the research, and we can do this right away, leading with social equity, public health and public safety.”

But the legislation the governor sent to Ebbin and Herring did not call for action right away. Instead, the governor’s timeline called for legalization to wait until commercial sales begin. Advocates who worked with lawmakers during the tense negotiations said the governor’s office maintained that position throughout the process, leading to an end result that delays legalization until New Year’s Day 2024. That means that the governor is now hearing from people urging him to change his position on the timing of legalization.

“The governor said that this is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” — House Majority Leader Charniele Herring that aspect of the legislation again when they meet next year. “This is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” said Herring, who introduced the decriminalization bill last year. “At least we have a date in stone. At least we are standing up the authority and starting to promulgate regulations, and so it is a product that we can work with.”

Advocates say the final few days of secret negotiations were rough, and the process was in danger of collapsing at several points. So the fact that lawmakers put something — anything — on the governor’s desk this year is a victory of sorts. As governor, Northam has the power to amend the bill almost any way he sees fit, and he has until the end of this month to take action. That means he’s now being lobbied heavily by advocates for criminal justice reform to legalize marijuana as soon as possible instead of waiting for the business dynamics to materialize.

“I’m extremely disappointed that we legislated business before justice,” said Chelsea Higgs Wise, executive director of Marijuana Justice Virginia. “The governor said that this bill was supposed to prioritize racial equity but it’s clear that it only prioritized a cannabis profit industry.”

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY session began with Northam calling on lawmakers to legalize marijuana, building on momentum from the decriminalization bill he signed into law last year. During his State of the Commonwealth address, the governor framed the move as an acknowledgement that Virginia’s criminal justice system treats people unfairly. He used his speech to spotlight some statistics showing Black people are three and a half times more likely to be charged with marijuana crimes and four times as likely to be convicted.

“It’s time to join 16 other states and make marijuana legal, and end the current system rooted in inequality,” said Northam in a speech delivered in a House chamber that was mostly empty because of pandemic precautions. “We’ve done the research, and we can do this right away, leading with social equity, public health and public safety.”

But the legislation the governor sent to Ebbin and Herring did not call for action right away. Instead, the governor’s timeline called for legalization to wait until commercial sales begin. Advocates who worked with lawmakers during the tense negotiations said the governor’s office maintained that position throughout the process, leading to an end result that delays legalization until New Year’s Day 2024. That means that the governor is now hearing from people urging him to change his position on the timing of legalization.

“The governor said that this is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” — House Majority Leader Charniele Herring that aspect of the legislation again when they meet next year. “This is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” said Herring, who introduced the decriminalization bill last year. “At least we have a date in stone. At least we are standing up the authority and starting to promulgate regulations, and so it is a product that we can work with.”

Advocates say the final few days of secret negotiations were rough, and the process was in danger of collapsing at several points. So the fact that lawmakers put some-thing — anything — on the governor’s desk this year is a victory of sorts. As governor, Northam has the power to amend the bill almost any way he sees fit, and he has until the end of this month to take action. That means he’s now being lobbied heavily by advocates for criminal justice reform to legalize marijuana as soon as possible instead of waiting for the business dynamics to materialize.

“I’m extremely disappointed that we legislated business before justice,” said Chelsea Higgs Wise, executive director of Marijuana Justice Virginia. “The governor said that this bill was supposed to prioritize racial equity but it’s clear that it only prioritized a cannabis profit industry.”

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY session began with Northam calling on lawmakers to legalize marijuana, building on momentum from the decriminalization bill he signed into law last year. During his State of the Commonwealth address, the governor framed the move as an acknowledgement that Virginia’s criminal justice system treats people unfairly. He used his speech to spotlight some statistics showing Black people are three and a half times more likely to be charged with marijuana crimes and four times as likely to be convicted.

“It’s time to join 16 other states and make marijuana legal, and end the current system rooted in inequality,” said Northam in a speech delivered in a House chamber that was mostly empty because of pandemic precautions. “We’ve done the research, and we can do this right away, leading with social equity, public health and public safety.”

But the legislation the governor sent to Ebbin and Herring did not call for action right away. Instead, the governor’s timeline called for legalization to wait until commercial sales begin. Advocates who worked with lawmakers during the tense negotiations said the governor’s office maintained that position throughout the process, leading to an end result that delays legalization until New Year’s Day 2024. That means that the governor is now hearing from people urging him to change his position on the timing of legalization.

“The governor said that this is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” — House Majority Leader Charniele Herring that aspect of the legislation again when they meet next year. “This is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” said Herring, who introduced the decriminalization bill last year. “At least we have a date in stone. At least we are standing up the authority and starting to promulgate regulations, and so it is a product that we can work with.”

Advocates say the final few days of secret negotiations were rough, and the process was in danger of collapsing at several points. So the fact that lawmakers put something — anything — on the governor’s desk this year is a victory of sorts. As governor, Northam has the power to amend the bill almost any way he sees fit, and he has until the end of this month to take action. That means he’s now being lobbied heavily by advocates for criminal justice reform to legalize marijuana as soon as possible instead of waiting for the business dynamics to materialize.

“I’m extremely disappointed that we legislated business before justice,” said Chelsea Higgs Wise, executive director of Marijuana Justice Virginia. “The governor said that this bill was supposed to prioritize racial equity but it’s clear that it only prioritized a cannabis profit industry.”

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY session began with Northam calling on lawmakers to legalize marijuana, building on momentum from the decriminalization bill he signed into law last year. During his State of the Commonwealth address, the governor framed the move as an acknowledgement that Virginia’s criminal justice system treats people unfairly. He used his speech to spotlight some statistics showing Black people are three and a half times more likely to be charged with marijuana crimes and four times as likely to be convicted.

“It’s time to join 16 other states and make marijuana legal, and end the current system rooted in inequality,” said Northam in a speech delivered in a House chamber that was mostly empty because of pandemic precautions. “We’ve done the research, and we can do this right away, leading with social equity, public health and public safety.”

But the legislation the governor sent to Ebbin and Herring did not call for action right away. Instead, the governor’s timeline called for legalization to wait until commercial sales begin. Advocates who worked with lawmakers during the tense negotiations said the governor’s office maintained that position throughout the process, leading to an end result that delays legalization until New Year’s Day 2024. That means that the governor is now hearing from people urging him to change his position on the timing of legalization.

“The governor said that this is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” — House Majority Leader Charniele Herring that aspect of the legislation again when they meet next year. “This is better than nothing at all. What’s not progressive is to sit on our hands and do nothing,” said Herring, who introduced the decriminalization bill last year. “At least we have a date in stone. At least we are standing up the authority and starting to promulgate regulations, and so it is a product that we can work with.”

Advocates say the final few days of secret negotiations were rough, and the process was in danger of collapsing at several points. So the fact that lawmakers put something — anything — on the governor’s desk this year is a victory of sorts. As governor, Northam has the power to amend the bill almost any way he sees fit, and he has until the end of this month to take action. That means he’s now being lobbied heavily by advocates for criminal justice reform to legalize marijuana as soon as possible instead of waiting for the business dynamics to materialize.
Enormous number of measures baked into budget to address critical needs in an unprecedented year.

Budget Passed

By Delegate Paul Krizek

The 2021 session of the Virginia General Assembly came to a close on Monday, March 1st, which really culminated with a long twelve hours on the floor Saturday that included the final passage of the budget bill, and tax conformity legislation that set a critical $100,000 threshold for PPP expense deductibility for 2020 for all businesses in the Commonwealth.

The budget was not just one of our final bills passed, but one I played a significant role in as we wrapped up this special session. The budget allocates state funding to our legislatures priorities, maintains our AAA bond rating, and promotes fiscal responsibility by adding an additional $250 million to our total of $900 million into our Revenue Reserve Fund — to help rebuild our economy and put our Commonwealth on a path to come back from this pandemic better than before.

In my position as one of the seven Subcommittee Chairs of the House Appropriations Committee, I was instrumental in the passage of many important amendments to the budget, and in assisting my colleagues in getting their critical budgetary priorities included in our final product.

COVID

The budget employs new and existing federal dollars to address critical needs such as COVID-19 vaccinations, testing, and disease surveillance and investigation. $89.3 million non general funds (NGF) over the biennium is allocated for mass vaccination efforts, maximizing new federal dollars. It provides $6.1 million GF and $40.9 million in new federal funds for state agencies to support disease surveillance, and investigation, testing, and contact tracing. The new funding supports 47 epidemiologists and communicable disease nurses across the Commonwealth’s 35 local health districts and 3.5 program managers in the central office.

Education

This budget has a big focus on education, adding $466.8 million for education over the biennium, restoring over 95% of funding re-moved since the onset of the pandemic. These funds are critical as students and teachers begin returning to in-person learning. Initiatives include learning loss supplemental payments, which provide $40 million GF monies in FY 2021 to support local efforts to address COVID-19 learning loss. These funds may be used for extending the school year, summer school, tutoring, remediation and recovery, counseling and student supports, and certain facility modifications. This also permits school divisions to carryover funds from FY 2021 to 2022, with no local match required.

$26.6 million will fund additional school counselors bringing our counselor to student ratio to 25:1. $49.5 million provides for funding three specialized student support positions per 1,000 students, including school nurses, school social workers, school psychologists, and behavioral analysts. $62.1 million will be used to temporarily expand family eligibility for the child care subsidy program to assist families affected by the pandemic.

Marijuana Legalization Can Reduce School Inequity

By Rob Krupicka

Marijuana legalization, which was just passed by the General Assembly, presents a rare opportunity for society to right decades of wrongs. When Governor Northam proposed legalization he included a bold idea to fix generations of injustice in our education system.

As a former legislator, member of the state board of education and local official, I know all too well that economically disadvantaged children are more likely to show up to kindergarten unprepared for school. New data from the University of Virginia tells us how much of a challenge this is.

In northern Virginia, as many as 49% of Alexandria kids, 31% of Arlington kids, 46% of Fairfax, 33% of Loudoun and 44% of Prince William County kids all show up to kindergarten unprepared for success.

Outside of Northern Virginia the numbers are similar, rising up to 55% of Richmond City kids and 66% of Northampton kids not being ready. The state average is a depressing 44%. We also know that a disproportionate number of economically disadvantaged families come from black and brown communities.

These children all lack key literacy, math, and social skills to excel in school. They are at a considerable disadvantage to their peers from more well-off families. No child’s potential for success should be governed by their economic status. Yet, strikingly, there are over 20,000 young children and families who need support to enter school with all the tools they need to learn.

Young children of economically disadvantaged households carry their lack of Kindergarten readiness throughout their school careers perpetuating a cycle of inequity and academic set-backs that continue to plague our economy and society.

With legalization slated to start in 2024, the new market for marijuana is slated to provide the funds that can help to right the wrong of systematic school readiness failures. For years voters in Virginia have told pollsters that they agree we need high quality early childhood education. The political challenge has always been how do we pay for it. Well, once the market is established, we have established a way.

Thanks to Governor Northam’s leadership, legalization comes with a potent policy answer to one of the most glaring areas of injustice in our education system. Patrioned by Senators Lucas and Ebin as well as Delegates Herring and Scott, SB1406/HB2312 provides a framework for legalization. Now that the bill has been sent to the governor to amend or sign, the question is not whether we will ever legalize in Virginia, the question is whether we will do it soon enough to change the academic trajectory of babies being born right now.

Rob Krupicka is former Virginia State Delegate, Virginia Board of Education Member and Alexandria City Councilman.
Budget Passed

those skill game machines will be illegal and need to be removed from all public locations, mostly found in restaurants, convenience stores, and truck stops.

Elections
The budget authorizes the Department of Elections (ELECT) to use about $1 million in remaining funds appropriated during Special Session 1, 2020 General Assembly for the reimbursement of postage on absentee ballots. It also adds language to extend absentee voting-related policies, such as ballot drop boxes and my initiative for prepaid postage on the return of absentee ballots until new laws for the 2020 and 2021 General Assemblies codify these changes. The changes made to election law in response to the COVID-19 pandemic will increase voter access, aid absentee voting, and make it easier for voters. ELECT also extended the use of prepaid postage on the return of absentee ballots until new laws make these changes permanent.

Healthcare
The budget adds $129.9 million in state and federal funds to increase Medicaid patient care rates. It also provides $6.9 million in state and federal funds in FY 2022 for up to 40 hours paid sick leave for personal care attendant.

$300,000 is included in FY 2022 for ELECT to educate voters on changes made to election law in the 2020 and 2021 General Assembly Sessions.

Healthcare

The budget adds $129.9 million in state and federal funds to increase Medicaid patient care rates. It also provides $6.9 million in state and federal funds in FY 2022 for up to 40 hours paid sick leave for personal care attendants.

$300,000 is included in FY 2022 for ELECT to educate voters on changes made to election law in the 2020 and 2021 General Assembly Sessions.

Healthcare

The budget adds $129.9 million in state and federal funds to increase Medicaid patient care rates. It also provides $6.9 million in state and federal funds in FY 2022 for up to 40 hours paid sick leave for personal care attendants. $93.4 million in state and federal funds to provide a $15/day add-on payment for Medicaid nursing home patients, including $4.4 million in FY 2022 to increase the Auxiliary Grant rate by 10 percent to support individuals in assisted living facilities. 435 Developmental Disability waiver slots will be added, bringing the total to 985 slots in FY 2022, with the goal of eliminating the waiver slot waiting list in coming years.

Locally, we were able to include $5 million for the National Museum of the United States Army; and, provide $200,000 to the Lexington Community Action Center; $500,000 to United Community; $200,000 to Good Shepherd Housing and Family Services; $250,000 to FACETS; $200,000 to Koeltzow; and $200,000 to BritePaths in FY 2022 from the TANF block grant to provide services to low-income families in Northern Virginia during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Also, our efforts resulted in $2 million towards the purchase of River Farm, and $1.5 million for Mason Neck Park’s drinking water supply. My amendment of $1 million will increase enforcement of unlawful direct shipment of alcoholic beverages into Virginia to curb the negative effects of unlicensed alcohol shipments on lawful Virginia businesses and allow Virginia to recoup lost tax revenue from these products. Also, included was my amendment for funding for the Department of Environmental Quality to test the effectiveness of certain plants to remove road salt from impervious surface stormwater runoff, and money for DMAS to convene a workgroup to develop strategies to finance health care services for undocumented immigrant children to ensure that all children living in the Commonwealth have access to quality healthcare. And, I was able to help secure an additional $10 million towards NOVA localities’ FY22 obligation to WMATA’s capital and operating programs to ensure that public transit keeps Northern Virginia moving.

It was a busy session!

ATTENTION
This market for sellers is the best I’ve seen in the 30 plus years I have been in Real Estate. Interest rates appear to have bottomed out, and coupled with low inventory we have an incredibly strong seller’s market. IMHO, interest rates have only one place to go now, and that is up. Once that starts the initial response from buyers who have been sitting on the fence, will be to jump in to buy and this will create an even stronger MELT UP for sellers’ prices. At some point, however, the market will correct while interest rates continue to climb and housing demand will then slow down. If you are considering selling, call me NOW and I will do a market analysis and help you maximize probably the biggest investment in your life. Let me put my 30 plus years of experience to work for you. Stay safe and healthy, Rex Reiley

For more information: www.RexReiley.com
Each Office Independently Owned and Operated
The Value of Dead Wood

By Glenda C. Booth
Mount Vernon Gazette

Trees snags are “a gourmet restaurant,” that is, from a bird’s perspective, Larry Cartwright told a group of Northern Virginia Audubon at Home ambassadors on Feb. 20 in a Zoom meeting.

He encouraged attendees to leave dead trees and limbs in place to decompose if they do not pose a danger. A snag is a standing dead or partially-dead tree. Cartwright conducts bird surveys for several organizations, including the Dyke Marsh breeding bird survey, for at least 27 years.

Some birds use dead snags during their decomposition to excavate holes, to find food like fungi, insects and mosses, and to nest and raise their young. Woodpeckers are expert excavators with specially built beaks to ratatatat into wood and create holes.

Among bird species, 85 use snags and cavities and 25 of those are in Northern Virginia. Other wildlife like flying squirrels, raccoons and big brown bats use cavities as well. Cornell University’s ornithology lab calls snags “nature’s apartment complexes.”

Cartwright told the group that the ideal snag height is eight to ten feet and the ideal circumference at least eight inches. He also advised people to let stumps remain for birds like woodpeckers and flickers.

Cavity Nesters
There are two types of cavity-nesting birds, primary and secondary, Cartwright explained. The primary nesters excavate their own cavities, like the pileated, red-bellied, hairy and downy woodpeckers.

Carolina chickadees can excavate a cavity if the wood is rotten enough. White-breasted nuthatches can enlarge existing holes.

The secondary cavity-nesting birds do not excavate their own cavities but use those created by broken off limbs or drilled by woodpeckers, for example, great-crested flycatchers, bluebirds, wood ducks, hooded mergansers, barred owls and screech owls.

In wetlands like Dyke Marsh, prothonotary warblers use cavities as small as six inches.

Dead Wood Is Habitat
Dead wood, whether it’s stumps, logs, twigs or snags, is a natural occurrence, part of nature’s cycle. Fungi help break down dead wood’s organic remains. Dead wood decomposes and eventually works its way back into the soil, enriching it and aiding plants’ growth.

Wildlife use dead tree limbs and snags for nesting, roosting, foraging, perching and territorial displays. Dead trees provide habitat for over 1,000 species of wildlife says the National Wildlife Federation.

Fallen logs provide microclimates for microscopic critters; insect eggs and larvae; birds, amphibians and more.

Small mammals like chipmunks, squirrels and moles use logs as runways and lookouts. Salamanders use downed logs as cover from predators and to escape summer’s sun.

Insects overwinter in snags’ decomposing wood or gaps between loose bark.

Butterflies like the mourning cloak question mark and comma and wood-boring beetles spend the winter inside dead wood. Woodpeckers feast on termites and carpenter ants in dead wood.

Mike Roberts wrote in Virginia Wildlife magazine, “Something as simple as an old, dead tree can teach us a valuable lesson or two about our wonderful natural environment; indeed, there is much more to recycling than paper and plastic.”

Audubon at Home
Audubon ambassadors are volunteers with the Audubon Society of Northern Virginia who give free, on-site consultations and recommendations on designing native plant habitat to attract and shelter wildlife. Visit https://www.audubonva.org/audubon-at-home.

Ed Eder took this photo of a Carolina Chickadee at the nest cavity entrance during the 2020 Dyke Marsh Breeding Bird Survey.
Housing Values Increase and This Will Soon Be Felt in Tax Bills

The county juggles the tax rate, but higher tax bills are on the horizon.

By Mike Salmon
The Connection

Despite the impact of job losses, deaths and sickness that swept over the nation over the last year, the housing values in Fairfax County have increased, and this will trickle down to the taxes paid by homeowners, including seniors that live on a fixed income.

The tax rate proposed by County Executive Bryan Hill is reduced from last year, but the average homeowner would still pay more because of increased home values. The Board of Supervisors won’t advertise a tax rate until March 9.

According to the county, residential real estate assessments are up an average of 4.25 percent countywide and about 88 percent of homeowners saw an increase in their home’s value. The county says these are market-driven increases or decreases to values. Only 4.4 percent saw a decrease in value, and assessments are unchanged for the remaining 7.6 percent. This year the average assessment for all homes is $607,752, compared to $582,976 in 2020.

The southern part of Fairfax County saw the biggest assessment increases. Houses in Lee District went up the most at 6.32 percent followed by Braddock at 6.06 percent, and Mount Vernon at 5.29 percent. In the Sully District, values raised 4.6 percent, while in the Providence District there is a 3.91 percent increase, followed by a 3.67 percent increase in Hunter Mill, 2.53 percent in Dranesville and 5.3 percent in Mason.

THE ASSESSMENTS are based on the market value, and the county assesses all properties on an annual basis, using sales records as one way to determine a property’s value. If the market is hot, the housing prices go up, and eventually the taxes paid go up. According to the county, an annual real estate assessment of all real estate property ensures that they are uniformly and fairly assessing properties at their fair market value.

For example, the seniors that have paid off their mortgage will simply write a bigger check this summer when the county tax bill is due. Others who pay their county taxes as part of the escrow account will pay an increased monthly mortgage bill for 2022.

In Springfield, where the increase in housing values rose 4.89 percent, Supervisor Pat Herrity is not satisfied with the taxpayers increase at this time. The advertised county budget increase for fiscal 2022 includes a 3.4 percent increase in the tax on homeowners. “This year’s advertised budget continues to raise taxes on home-

See Home, Page 10
Plant-Based Cottage Bakery Coming to Del Ray

By Hope Nelson

Le Petit Grump: It’s a reference to the way the magic has been happening for months as Gumina perfectioned her diet, and she wants to bring that back to the community in a big way.

“Food has always been a passion of mine,” Gumina said. “I love how it brings people together.”

Another element of the bakery? It’s all plant-based. That’s right: No dairy, eggs or other animal products will be used in the food, broadening the menu to an even wider swath of customers.

The idea for a bakery came to Gumina well after she’d transitioned to a plant-based lifestyle. Rich baked sweets were a category of food she missed when she transitioned her diet, and she wants to make it very simple,” she said. At first, she’ll be primarily offering croissants in multiple flavors – plain, chocolate and the like. But as the business grows, so will her offerings.

And in the meantime, she’s putting the finishing touches on practice run after practice run, making sure her recipes and oven are just so prior to opening to the public.

“One day, I really hope that everybody that wants to eat!” she said.

Gumina intends to start small, both in terms of menu items and orders. At this point, she’s eyeing a system of opening up a finite amount of orders each week, culminating in specific pickup times on the weekends.

“My plan for right now, because my kitchen is so small, is to keep it very simple,” she said. At first, she’ll be primarily offering croissants in multiple flavors – plain, chocolate and the like. But as the business grows, so will her offerings.

And in the meantime, she’s putting the finishing touches on practice run after practice run, making sure her recipes and oven are just so prior to opening to the public.

“The response from the community is more doable than I thought,” said Gumina, noting that other vegan and vegetarian circles are abuzz with excitement about the bakery’s progress.

“I was really fortunate for the outpouring of love I’ve received from the vegan community,” she said.

And about the bakery’s name, Le Petit Grump: It’s a reference to the bakery’s name, says that once she realized that “cottage” businesses are businesse with an out of the box, a perfectly viable way of operation. “Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“This is not something that has been in the works for years and years,” she said. “The idea came to me one day, and I just had this really good feeling about it and I ran with it.”

And the region’s vegan and vegetarian circles are abuzz with excitement about the bakery’s progress – and opening.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grump up and running.

“Eating the food that was put out there by other plant-based cottage businesses showed me that it is more doable than I thought,” she said, noting that other vegan restaurants and eateries have been incredibly generous with their time and expertise to help get Le Petit Grum
Local Republicans To Hold Candidate Information Session

Local Republican party Chairman Pete Benavage announced that the party is planning an information session on March 6 for local Republicans interested in running for office. The session will focus on the rules for filing to run, fundraising, the party’s primary process, and tips for candidate messaging.

The Alexandria Republican City Committee’s (ARCC) leadership sees opportunity in the 2021 local elections. They say there is widespread dissatisfaction with the current Democrats in office on a variety of local issues including housing density, transportation congestion, inadequate flood control, rising taxes, overcapacity-underperforming schools, and proposals to co-locate housing on school property.

Benavage says “The local Republican party is actively encouraging local moderates and conservatives to step up to the plate. We will call on the experiences and expertise of elected Alexandria Republicans, former Vice Mayor Bill Cleveland, former City Councilman Frank Fannon, and others in shaping our information session and coaching our candidates.”

Linda App, President of the Commonwealth Republican Women’s Club (CRWC) in Alexandria, said “The 2020 Election brought us a lot of interest and new members who are not happy with Alexandria’s all-Democrat city council or Democrat elected officials in the General Assembly. Many new Republicans are former Democrats. This is the right time for Republicans to run in Alexandria. I think some of our members will be running.”

To register for the March 6 Republican Candidate Information Session, go to www.AlexGOP.org.

ARCC is the local branch of the national Republican Party. CRWC is the Alexandria chapter of the National Federation of Republican Women. More information is available at www.Alexandria-CRWC.org.
ELECTRICAL

K & E Electric
Commercial / Residential Services
Family Owned & Operated
Racetrack Lighting
Cabling Panel
Licensed/Bonded/Insured
Phone/CATV
Computer Network Cabling
Office 703-335-0654
Service Upgrades
Mobile 703-459-0652
Hot Tub, etc.
laughman24@gmail.com

LANDSCAPING

Quality Tree Service & Landscaping
Reasonable prices. Licensed & insured.
Summer Cleanup: One removal, trimming, pruning, shrubbery, fescue. Fearless.
25 years of experience – Free estimate.
703-868-5358

Patio & Drainage
Your neighborhood company since 1987
703-772-0500

J.E.S. Services
Free Estimates - Fully Licensed & Insured
• Planting & Landscaping Design
• Drainage & Water Problems
• Concrete Driveways, Replacement or New
• Patios and Walks – Masonry Work or Dry Lay
• Paver, Flagstone, Brick, any style you choose

All work Guaranteed

Free Digital Subscription
To any or all of our 15 papers
www.connectionnewspapers.com/subscriptions

FREE DIGITAL SUBSCRIPTION

To sign up for

Business Directory
WWW.CONNECTIONNEWSPAPERS.COM
Call 703-549-0004
FOR ADVERTISING INFORMATION

NEWS

RIVER FARM OFFER FALLS SHORT OF ASKING PRICE

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

Well, those last two weeks were kind of fun (comparatively speaking), to the dozen or so previous weeks. "Fun," when you’re a cancer patient experiencing side effects to your treatment, is a moderation, absence even of said effects. My recent two-week break from taking my thyroid cancer medication was due to this side effect. Mentioned in a previous column, I was having balance and dizziness issues. In short, I couldn’t walk or drive — for that matter, in a straight line. After consulting with my oncologist who deferred to the oncology pharmacist who’s been monitoring/adjusting my medication dosage, it was agreed that I should cease and desist until my symptoms subsided. As of this past Thursday, my symptoms had mostly disappeared so I have resumed my treatment, albeit at a lower dose. This will be the second reduction in my dose since we’ve been trying to find the sweet spot where the tumors are stable and the side effects are manageable.

Actually, these last two weeks of being side-effect free was more than just a break in the action. It was a revelation of sorts. The infinity/muscle weakness I was having was not due to the older age I have become. It was the medication. During this past fortnight, I began to feel like myself again. I could get in and out of chairs without pacing myself. I could roll over in bed and get out of bed without feeling racey and wobbly. And of course, I could walk and drive a straight line. It was wonderful. When one is in the midst of a cancer diagnosis/existence, any indication that your body functions are performing “within normal parameters,” to quote Lt. Comm. Data from “Star Trek: Next Generation” is somewhere between reassuring and life-affirming.

Generally speaking, we all feel that cancer doesn’t make its diagnoses big and strong. Realistically speaking, you’re happy with normal. Conversely, when someone tells you feel, it’s hard to portend that death/disability is not fast-approaching. Moreover, it’s an especially slippery slope when one has been given a “terminal” diagnosis originally and more recently had that diagnosis modified to include a second type of cancer papillar things. Stage II, IV, stage IV to go along with my pre-existing not so small lung cancer, also stage IV. One has to fight emotional and physical to keep from getting bogged down that rabbit hole. Any good news an unexpected positive reaction with your disease, like your mind and body returning to pre-cancer normalcy is about as good as it gets. So even though I’m back on the medicine, I feel empowered, upbeat, hopeful even. To that end continuation of life I am not going to worry yet that the reduced dose will allow my symptoms to grow. I’m just not going to go there. What would be the point? I’ll find out soon enough, a few days after my next CT scan in mid-March. Until then, I am going to bask in my semi return to glory.

Speaking of glory, as a cancer patient, one has to grasp and hold on to anything of emotion-al, physical, psychological or spiritual value. In addition, what information you receive which is not particularly positive, in that it’s premature/unproven/not corroborated by science, has to be compartmentalized. As with Jerry Seinfeld, you have to put it in the vault and almost throw away the key. Allowing negative possibilities or unpalatable scenarios to take root in your brain really does a disservice to your potential surviv-al. Even so I was diagnosed with a “terminal” form of cancer. I’ve tried not to put the cart in front of the horse, if you know what I mean? The diagnosis was bad enough on its own. I didn’t need to make it worse by juggling on. If and when my life becomes challenging/ more cancer-centric than it is now, I’ll deal with it. I don’t need to bring it on any sooner than is absolutely necessary. I’ve had 12 years I wasn’t expecting since receiving an initial “13 month to two” year prognosis. Ten years later I wasn’t do see any reason to change my approach.

Kenny Lourie is an Advertising Representative for The Potomac Almanac & The Connection Newspapers. who owned it in 1653 or 1654, the listing states. Then George Washington bought it and made it part of his plantation. Malcolm Matheson bought the property in 1919 and remodeled the home, and in 1973, American Horticultural Society (AHS) board member and philanthropist Enid Annenberg Haupt provided funds for the AHS to purchase the property, the listing states. The grounds now house the offices of AHS and are used for weddings, events, and gardening.

Haupt intended for the property to remain open to the public.

Historic Overlay District?

The County is currently considering the creation of an Historic Overlay District (HOD) for the River Farm property. New state legislation recently approved by the House and Senate will allow the county to protect the land by permitting inclusion of a provision in our historic preservation ordinance that would allow public access to "an historic area, landmark, building, or structure, or land pertaining thereto, or providing that no subdivision shall occur within any historic district unless approved by the review board or, on appeal, by the governing body of the locality as being compatible with the historic nature of such area, landmarks, buildings, or structures."

"I remain hopeful that the AHS Board will support the criticality of preserving this historic property for the public and future generations," Storck said in a community email. "We know this commitment has been a longstanding mission of the AHS Board and its members."

praisals, possibly lowering the amount of the value of their homes, and therefore the amount of their tax bill. There are two levels of appeal, the county said. The first one is an administrative appeal to the Department of Tax Administration, and the second level is to the Board of Equalization, an independent body made up of residents of Fairfax County. In 2020, DTA received 493 administrative appeals and the BOE received 69 appeals.

Herrity did note that some of the seniors in his district have moved out because of the increased taxes. "Older adults are being taxed out of Fairfax County," Herrity said. County residents can look for an opportunity to speak out on taxes over the next few weeks. There are public hearings about the county budget from April 13-15. A mark-up of the final budget draft is turned in on April 27 and the new budget comes out May 4.

To see where your real estate taxes are spent, visit the real estate calculator at: https://www.fairfaxcounty.gov/taxcalc/
64 Alexandria Homes Sold In 2020 &
25 homes sold so far in 2021!

9406 Old Mt. Vernon Rd
$998,000

4233 Laurel Dr
$755,000

4305 Sheridans Point Ct
$835,000

8906 Old Mount Vernon Rd
$719,500

9226 Volunteer Dr
$650,000

8329 Orange Ct
$728,750

3809 Kings Hill Ct
$989,250

8525 Bound Brook Pl
$625,000

9205 Forest Haven Dr
$1,001,600

9032 Mcnair Dr
$655,000

3713 Washington Woods Dr
$1,010,000

4620 Tarpon Ln
$825,000

Considering selling in 2021? Call us today!

703.283.9028
www.chrisandpeggywhite.com
chris.white@longandfoster.com
Alexandria/Old Town Historic - 400 King Street, Alexandria, VA 22314