The list above is not a comprehensive list of all structures with weight restrictions in the Commonwealth, but shows only structures that have new or changed weight restrictions within the last 30 days. The list contains only basic structure identification and location information and the date the new or changed weight restriction and signage became effective.

For a full listing of all bridge and culvert weight restrictions with detailed information about specific structures, including location data and actual weight limits, visit <https://www.virginiadot.org> and navigate to Info Center/Trucking Resources. This page references a posted structures report and a GIS map tool that contain detailed information about restricted structures in Virginia. To receive email notifications regarding new or updated weight restrictions for structures statewide, complete the sign-up form on the web page.

Notices regarding bridges and culverts with new or updated weight restrictions are published monthly by VDOT. For additional information or questions, please contact haulingpermits@vdot.virginia.gov.

Residents: 'Why Would We Want This?'

Huge data center is proposed in Chantilly.

By BONNIE HOBBS
THE CONNECTION

Unbeknownst to most residents, when the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors recently re-adopted its revamped zoning ordinance, zMOD, it quietly added a provision allowing data centers to be built, by right, on industrially zoned land within a quarter mile of residential homes.

To the supervisors, data centers represent a massive amount of county tax revenue. But for others, they sound the alarm for their potential to emit noise 24/7 and pollute the soil, air and water – including the Occoquan Reservoir, which provides safe drinking water for the county's nearly 1.2 million people.

In Chantilly's Pleasant Valley community, this threat is hitting close to home. That's because PD-CREF 2 Chantilly LLC (Penzance) wants to build a gigantic data center nearby. The site is adjacent to the Cub Run Stream Valley, Route 50 and Auto Park Circle, off Stonecroft Boulevard in Chantilly, just 4/10 of a mile from Pleasant Valley.

The land is partly zoned commercial and partly industrial, so Penzance is asking the county to rezone all of it industrial. It's also seeking special exceptions so the data center could be as high as 110 feet, instead of the 70 feet allowed there, plus have more density. A warehouse option is offered as a plan B, but it's obvious to all that the data center would be much more financially beneficial to both the county and the developer.

It would arise on 12.1 acres of a 79-acre parcel, with the remaining 67 acres preserved as a Resource Protection Area. Representing the applicant, land-use attorney Evan Pritchard presented details of the proposal to a recent meeting of the Joint Land-Use Committee – Sully District Council and West Fairfax County Citizens Assn. (WFCCA).

"The site was approved in 2020 for a car dealership that was never built," said Pritchard. "We're proposing a 402,000-square-foot data center, but what gets built could be smaller. It's large for that site, but not as large as some other data centers. And there's stronger demand now for data centers, than for car dealerships."

He said it would have a couple acres less impervious surface than would a car dealership and 46 percent of the 12.1 acres would be open space, including "a stormwater-management pond to prevent pollution from getting into Cub Run. And a data center would have far less daily vehicle trips." Access would be off Auto Park Circle, with a Route 50 entrance for emergency vehicles only. And a 10-foot-wide trail could go around the Resource Protection Area.

Pritchard said the data center wouldn't be visible from Route 50 or the Pleasant Valley neighborhood, only from the air. However, he added, "There'd be noise impacts from the generators and cooling systems. We'll probably have air-cooled systems, but they do generate noise." He said system maintenance would occur weekdays during daytime and downplayed the noise it would cause, but a resident said it could still disturb people working from home, napping children and the elderly.

A resident asked if there are plans to mitigate the sound if it exceeds approved noise levels, and Pritchard replied, "We'll have to

Fairfax City Council Committed to George Snyder Trail

510 trees must be removed to make way for the trail, but it's 'an investment for the next 50 years.'

BY BONNIE HOBBS
THE CONNECTION

Construction of the George Snyder Trail was first added to Fairfax City's Comprehensive Plan in 2012. Since then, the City has worked through its design with staff, consultants, the community, the Parks and Rec Advisory Board (PRAB), Environmental Sustainability Committee, and a trail advisory group.

This project has had a public hearing, a third-party review and has been revised accordingly. And now that its design is 100-percent complete, staff brought it to City Council's work session, last Tuesday, July 11, for an update, plus guidance moving forward.

The most controversial part is that 510 trees must be removed so the trail – including boardwalks and bridges – may be built. But, said Councilmember Tom Ross, "We're trying to create a balance, and I think the overall outcome will outweigh the environmental impacts."

Named after a former City mayor, it'll be a shared-use trail connecting Chain Bridge Road (Route 123) to the Wilcoxon Trail at Draper Drive, south of Fairfax Boulevard (Route 50). It's also planned to be ADA-compliant, with some sections porous asphalt and others, concrete boardwalk.

The goal is to improve regional trail connectivity within the City, with a design that limits impacts as much as possible to environmental resources, right-of-way and utilities. And having an off-road trail provides safe and comfortable access for pedestrians and cyclists of all ages and abilities.

Part of the project will be constructed within Fairfax City parks. Five prefabricated, steel-truss bridges with concrete decks will span small tributaries and Accotink Creek. The trail, itself, will be 10 feet wide, with 2-foot-wide shoulders on each side and no blind spots at bridge approaches.

It will link to existing trail segments at Marketplace Boulevard, Stafford Park, Cardinal Park and Draper Drive Park, connecting to neighborhoods, as well as to the City's commercial corridor. Disturbances to the Resource Protection Area and floodplain will be minimized.

Raised crosswalks and new signage will be added to neighborhood intersections. Dark-sky-compliant lighting is planned for just the intersections and trail junctions.

Boardwalk segments along the bridge approaches will have retaining walls and railings, and the bicycle/pedestrian bridges will be 14 feet wide, with concrete decks. Their purpose is to minimize floodplain impacts by eliminating the need for an embankment and to keep the trail above water.

Four retaining walls, ranging from 3-17 feet high, will be built between the trail and private properties and will also reduce grading impact to the forest. Viewing areas, educational markers and rain gardens are also included in the plans.

The $18.8 million project includes more than $13.6 million in Outside the Beltway I-66 Concessionaire funding, plus $360,000 in federal Congestion Mitigation and Air Quality money. The City currently has $17.6 million in available funding. It's currently finalizing right-of-way acquisitions and plans to start construction in spring 2024.

Before last week's Council work session, residents gave their opinions of the trail during public-comment time. Economic Development Authority Chair Beth Young called it "an investment for the business community and an added convenience for their customers and employees." Business-owner A.D. Hill said it would be a City amenity.

Central Fairfax Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Jennifer Rose said the trail would help Fairfax connect to the rest of the region. And John Gordon, who owns the WillowWood I and II office buildings, said, "Leasing office space is difficult, and having access to a bike trail directly from the office buildings will help attract more businesses and real-estate revenue to the City."

However, Kathryn Johnson had a petition with 1,577 signatures asking Council to "Preserve our forests – move the trail to a less ecologically damaging area." But she incorrectly stated 3,000 trees would be removed.

Susan Chyler didn't want the woodlands "destroyed," and Jeb Mann wanted the project's scope "reassessed. You don't need to plow up the trees and pave over the woods." And Sherry Dealy contended that this trail would duplicate another, existing one.

"We need permeable surfaces," said Ellyn Pence. "Paving trails is just wrong." Jack Call asked Council to reconsider and not harm

"this island of peace and tranquility." And Boomer Dormitory decried the disruption of birds and wildlife this trail would cause, telling Council, "Don't prioritize blacktop above trees and wildlife."

Later, during the work session, Councilmember Kate Doyle Feingold said, "I think people are legitimately concerned about the environmental impacts. Trees are too important a resource to lose."

But Steve Zehnder with Stantec, the project consultant, said the "vast majority" of the project area would remain wooded, and 55 of the 510 trees to be removed are already dead. And they'll be replaced in a more than 1:1 ratio with native trees and plantings.

In addition, City Sustainability Coordinator Stefanie Kupka said since the trail will encourage people to bike and walk, instead of drive, it will actually "reduce greenhouse-gas emissions and pollution."

And Councilmember Jon Stehle, a former PRAB chair, said he was "ecstatic" about this trail. "This project will change people's lives in how they connect," he said. "And the bridges and boardwalks make sure people of all types can experience the forest."

Councilmember Jeff Greenfield asked about other options, such as widening Cardinal Road. But, replied Transportation Director Wendy Sanford, "If we had to look at alternate options, it would be a lot of work and time, after all the work and time we've already put into it, and might even increase the cost."

"If we step back and start looking at all these things, it'll cause delays and could put this whole project at risk," added Ross. "And we don't want staff to have to redo things they've already done."

"A third-party consultant already reviewed it, so I'm comfortable moving forward with it, as is," said Councilmember So Lim.

"After 60-percent design was reached, we hired Timmons to look at how the cost and environmental impacts could be reduced, within the scope of the project," said Public Works Director David Summers. Timmons suggested some trail realignments and expanded use of boardwalks – reducing forest disturbance by 30 percent – and these changes were made.

Councilmember Billy Bates said he supports the vision of this trail but wants to make sure all the tree mitigation is done.

Speaking last was Mayor Catherine Read, whose words clarified another reason this project is needed and gave staff permission to move forward.

"It's magical to be inside a forest in Fairfax City, and we have more forests than most cities do," she said. "But we're looking at this in terms of what we're losing. I look at what we gain – and it's not just about us."

"As part of health care, it's important for people who are ill or disabled to be able to get outside and enjoy what the rest of us can. So, to me, it's an equity issue – and at some point in the future, this could be us. There's a balance in nature, and this has to be an investment for the next 50 years. There'll be more trees and more people, so I'm fully behind this project. We're adding something permanent for future generations to use."

Barbie Mania Starts with a Run on the Racing Jackets

It's all pink at Springfield Town Center.

Barbie mania seems to be hitting everywhere including the Springfield Town Center where a fan scored a Barbie jacket before the $90 racing jackets were all sold out. "He called around three different stores about the racing jacket," said the saleswoman at the Box Lunch store.

They had a total of 15 racing jackets and all were snatched up by fans, leaving the store with a few Barbie t-shirts and sock packs.

At the other end of the town center, the Regal Cinema was ready for the movie release on Friday, July 21. The Barbie premiere was already on one mother's agenda. Her girls were excited and made their own Barbie shirts. "We already got our tickets," said the mother.

theater but the assistant manager wasn't aware of any hype coming that weekend with the movie release but she noted that it was a possibility. There were fans dressing up as Spiderman and Thor when those movies came out so someone showing up in pink with a blonde bouffant hairdo wouldn't surprise anyone. Although the movie comes out Friday, Regal was playing a sneak preview on Thursday.

Regal was feeding the movie hype and has the "Xbox Barbie Box Prize Sweepstakes," going and they are offering "Barbie Pink Popcorn," at participating theaters.

It's perfect for the Barbie movie script where Barbie and Ken live the perfect life in their pink house with a pink car until Barbie dares to test the real world where life isn't so perfect. She even punches somebody in the nose – oh my!

New Vehicle Charging Stations

Springfield Town Center is EV friendly.

BY MIKE SALMON
THE CONNECTION

The Springfield Town Center is moving and expanding their electric vehicle charging stations to make way for a Hilton project that is planned for the spot in the parking lot where the first charging station went up a few years ago near JCPenney parking garage.

Workers were moving the charging stations to make way for a larger Home2 by Hilton project that is slated to go in at the town center in the near future. Last December PREIT, the property development company that runs Springfield Town Center, announced that it has obtained unanimous approval from the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors for the development of 460 apartments and a 165-room hotel, paving the way for the sale of the land parcels both of which are under agreement of sale.

New Filling Stations

According to the International Energy Agency, there were over 2.3 million electric cars sold in the first quarter of 2023 and they expect to see 14 million sold by the end of this year. That means electric cars could account for 18% of total car sales across the full calendar year, IEA reports.

In September 2022, the Electric Vehicle Infrastructure Deployment Plans for all 50 States were released under the National Electric Vehicle Infrastructure (NEVI)

Workers put the final touch on new car charging stations at the Springfield Town Center.

Formula Program, established by President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure Law. Under the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law, $5 billion will be available over the next five years to help build a convenient, reliable, and affordable EV charging network across the country, DOT said.

It's not clear if the new charging station at the Springfield Town Center is directly linked this effort, but it is for the increasing number of electric vehicles in this area.

Welcome to Ned’s New England Deck in Fairfax City.

When it comes to meals made with fresh lobster, local residents don’t have to visit New England. All they have to do is visit Ned’s New England Deck, right in Fairfax City. It’s at 10655 Fairfax Blvd., next to the Baskin Robbins, and recently held its grand opening.

“Little did we know what Fairfax City needed most was a touch of New England – and with outdoor seating,” said Mayor Catherine Read. “You could have chosen any place, but you chose Fairfax City and we welcome you.”

“We couldn’t be more thrilled to have our newest Chamber of Commerce member,” added Doug Church, chairman of the Central Fairfax Chamber of Commerce. “I have a great love for the City, and this restaurant is just wonderful.”

Tucked into a cozy, wood-framed, New England-style house, Ned’s has a warm and inviting atmosphere and was just what co-owners Steve Forbes and Tony Gallotto were looking for. “When we saw this building and corner, it felt like home,” explained

Forbes. “This house looks like something you’d see in New England.”

The new restaurant specializes in authentic New England cuisine, including lobster rolls, fried clams, steamers, New England Clam Chowder, lobster bisque and Super Beef Sandwiches. And it’s already become a big hit with the customers. Just ask City Councilmember Tom Ross.

“My wife and I shared a roast beef sandwich and clam chowder, and it was absolutely delicious,” he said. “She’s from New England and gave it an A+. It’s a great addition to the City, and we hope it’s here a long time.”

Forbes and Gallotto have been cooking together since culinary class in high school and are delighted to bring their passion for New England dishes to the local community. “We thought Fairfax needed this,” said Forbes. “The feedback has been positive, and we’re really excited about it. We felt Northern Virginia was missing some authentic seafood offerings, and we added our Super Beef sandwiches to round out our concept.”

And since lobster is the highlight, they’re proud to serve the real deal. “We bring in the lobsters live from Maine and cook and clean them here,” said Forbes. “We also use a lot of the shells and lobster bodies to make a really strong and flavorful bisque.”

He and Gallotto also own a catering company, Bee Good Hospitality, but this is their first, brick-and-mortar restaurant. “I ran con-

Fairfax County Police Use of Force

Police shooting incidents by chief tenure.

Ongoing series about the Fairfax County Police Department and its policies and history on use of deadly force.

The Fairfax County Police Department General Order 540, Use of Force is scheduled for review in August 2025, General Order 540, Use of Force establishes guidelines and reporting requirements for the use of force.

This matters in our county because only by capturing the full picture of each such case of police use-of-force does it provide a complete understanding of the encounter with law enforcement and its outcomes. It clarifies and identifies what the department should consider reforming. It facilitates transparency and accountability, leading to community trust-building.

Police Chief Kevin Davis is 26 months into his administration as chief which began on May 3, 2021. Under Davis' leadership, 13 officers have used deadly force in 10 separate incidents.

An online message from Davis states that each officer in the department took an oath of office to protect and serve the community and is held to the highest of standards to protect the sanctity of life, human rights, and to uphold the law. "The Fairfax County Police Department's General Orders, rules, regulations, policies, and standards require that any deployment of deadly force shall be reasonably necessary when all other de-escalation options are not effective or viable for the specific situation."

In 2020, the University of Chicago Law School published "Deadly Discretion: The Failure of Police Use of Force Policies to Meet Fundamental International Human Rights Law and Standards." Incidents of police abuse in the United States "provide a grim illustration of the power law enforcement officers have over the people they are sworn to serve and protect and the deadly consequences when they abuse that power," according to the study.

International standards on police use of lethal force support four principles: 1) legality, "provided in a domestic law that complies with international standards," 2) necessity, "only in response to an imminent and particularized threat and only as a last resort; 3) proportionality- "only in response to threats to life or serious bodily harm to the officers or others," and 4) accountability, "requires an effective review process, involvement or an external oversight body and issuance of a report in all instances of the use of lethal force."

involved in a police shooting incident within ten days, with exceptions allowed for safety and security. The department releases body-worn camera footage within thirty days of an incident, such as the video from Feb. 2, 2022, when an officer fired one round from his service rifle, striking a man and wounding him so he fell to the ground on the front porch of the home.

A look back at the Fairfax County online Archived Summaries of Officer-Involved Shootings by Year shows that the Fairfax County Police Department has improved its public notifications since 2005. The department did not identify the officers who used deadly force just after the turn of the millennium or for many years afterward. In 2015, Board of Supervisors Chairman Sharon Bulova formed the Ad Hoc Police Practices Review Commission in the wake of public concern about the Aug. 29, 2013 police shooting death of unarmed Springfield resident John Geer in his own doorway and subsequent lack of information. The commission made 200 recommendations for reform, most adopted and mandated by the Board of Supervisors, including the release of names of officers. <https://www.fairfax-county.gov/policecommission/>

Chief Edwin C. Roessler's 86-month administration spanned from March 23 to July 29, 2013 as acting chief, and from July 30, 2013, to Feb. 2, 2021, as chief. Under his leadership, 15 officers deployed deadly force in 10 incidents.

Roessler said in 2019, after the violent domestic incident in Burke, in which FCPD Special Operations Division responded unsuccessfully to save hostages, "It's important to note the trauma all have been exposed to in this tragedy, and we continue to pray for all involved as they recover for the rest of their lives."

In an interview last week, on July 17, Roessler said he got "out of the office, preaching and teaching the sanctity of life." Roessler said that many officers did not like him, repeating their comment, "There he goes again talking about the sanctity of life."

"So there's a cultural attitude. You've got to change the culture through the leadership," Roessler said.

An officer's decision on whether to use deadly force has to do with policy and training (See Connection story, "FCPD Lacked Crisis, Decision Making Training," June 27, 2023) and is also intricately linked to leadership.

The Department's policy, FCPD's General Order 540, Use of Force, is crucial. Other influential factors: the officer's training; the less-lethal devices available at the moment of crisis moment, the suspect's weapon — firearm or not, and officers' past experiences, have they shot before?

When asked what FCPD could do better in 2023, Roessler, who is retired and living out of state, said to look at all the cases when officers used deadly force and the department's policy.

"You know, back in 2013, that was on my to-do list as Chief, Day One, because we already had legacy shootings that did not have answers," Roessler said.

"That's what we did, academically and mechanically. We moved forward; we made quick-hit changes (to General Order 540, Use of Force) that came up from those groups in the interim until we could review an entire General Order across the whole spectrum of the department's operation, administratively and operationally. We presented those to the (ad-hoc) commission and got their buy-in," Roessler said.

A policy review could require that reporting requirements made public on shootings, use-of-force, and civilian injury cases to include service years, prior incidents involving force or injury, administrative discipline, civil suits, misconduct settlements, and more.

The University of Chicago examined policing and public health through injury data. “Incidents of law-enforcement-related injury are frequently dismissed, in part, because they are anecdotal,” Alfreda Holloway-Beth, Ph.D., said. “The lack of comprehensive surveillance data permits a narrative to persist that the problem does not exist, is exaggerated, or is simply being used as a political tool by ‘anti-police’ constituents. Before we can define policies on reporting requirements, accountability, and training, we need to define the problem. This can only be done through a comprehensive surveillance program.”

Key insights included in the report found, “For every death [from police use-of-force], there were approximately 60–80 non-fatal injuries that required treatment in a hospital, with 13 percent of the civilians having suffered traumatic brain injuries, which have potential long-term severe outcomes.”

Data on incidents of law enforcement-related injuries to civilians is one example of information the Fairfax Police Department does not currently make available to the general public. Beyond civilian complaints, the Fairfax County Police Department does not compile annual data on civilians injured in interactions with law enforcement. It might occur through the use of force, such as positional asphyxia and electronic control weapons, or through deliberate car crashes or PIT maneuvers. The immediate and long-term effects of the injuries are not known.

The National Association for Civilian Oversight of Law Enforcement (NACOLE) is a non-profit organization that works to create a community of support for independent civilian oversight entities seeking to make local law enforcement more transparent, accountable, and responsive to their communities.

There are 127 police oversight jurisdictions listed on the website. Fairfax County is one. Fairfax County established the Office of the Independent Police Auditor, and the Police Civilian Review Panel, both formed as a result of the Ad Hoc Commission’s recommendation to the Board of Supervisors. The Auditor reviews police investigations involving the use of force and serves as an independent intake venue for complaints against the Fairfax County Police Department. The Police Auditor’s next report on incident reviews will occur at the Police Civilian Review Panel’s Aug. 3, 2023, meeting.

Davis declined to answer the Connection’s questions about how FCPD’s current General Order 540, Use of Force policy meets International Human Rights Law and Standards (by the University of Chicago), FCPD responded, “The Fairfax County Police Department is a leader in the law enforcement profession, implementing forward-thinking, equitable, and reasonable policies that consistently exceed both accreditation and industry standards and go through an extensive review process.”

Welcome to Ned's New England Deck in Fairfax City

cessions for the National Theater and was the managing partner for a group of large, Washington, D.C., sports bars, and Tony was the executive chef," said Forbes. "He and I also worked at a half-dozen restaurants together, through the years."

Now, though, they have something of their own, and they couldn't be happier. "We like meeting folks in this community," said Forbes. "And we're excited to be part of this city."

Hours are Monday-Saturday, 11 a.m.-9 p.m.; and Sunday, 11 a.m.-7:30 p.m., plus Saturday, Sunday and holiday-Monday brunch, 11 a.m.-2:30 p.m. Happy hour is Monday-Friday, from 2:30-6:30 p.m., with discounted wine and beer. "We have some really nice wines and sparkling rosés, including a reserve wine list from all over the world," said Forbes.

As for the food, he said the top three, most-popular items, in order, are the lobster rolls, New England Clam Chowder and Super Beef sandwiches. "Our lobster rolls are New England-style – cold and mayonnaise-based, with tail and claw meat on every buttered bun," said Forbes. "And our bread is baked fresh daily."

The clam chowder comes in two versions – classic and fluffy. The classic has bacon, a rich and creamy broth and is loaded with clams. The fluffy chowder comes with butter-poached, lobster claws on top, "making it super rich and indulgent," said Forbes.

And he said the Super Beefs have a "cult following" on the North Shore of Boston. They're made with thin roast beef, shaved to order on a slicer, and served rare and warm on an onion roll with white American cheese and James River Barbecue Sauce.

But that's not all Ned's offers. Specials include soft-shelled clam steamers in drawn butter; fried clams or strips; a seared, sesame-crusted, yellowtail tuna sandwich; and beer-battered fish and chips. Poke Nachos – made with wonton chips, yellowtail tuna, seaweed salad, pickled onions, avocado and sushi sauce – are a popular starter.

Salads include a classic Lobster Louis and a seared tuna salad featuring yellowtail tuna, edamame, pickled ginger, cucumbers, greens, charred asparagus, avocado and sesame-ginger vinaigrette. Sides are coleslaw, onion strings, hand-cut fries, Boston baked beans and house or Caesar salads.

Ned's also offers a Buffalo Chicken Caesar Wrap, and a charred veggie-and-avocado sandwich. There's even a charcuterie platter of meats, cheeses and accoutrements, as well as a kids' menu of chicken nuggets, hot dogs and cheese quesadillas.

On a recent afternoon, Tony Zelones and his sister Amy had lunch there together. Tony had a Beef Sammie with fries and Pinot Noir, and called the beef "exceptionally good."

Also enjoying a bowl of lobster bisque, he said, "It was phenomenal – fresh, hot, and you could taste the sherry in it. I'd 100-percent recommend this place to others."

Kara Davis was also there with her daughter Ky, who ordered the charcuterie platter. "The bread was warm and tasted like it was fresh out of the oven," said Ky. "And there was also prosciutto, salami, mortadella, brie, fontina, pecorino-Romano, honey mustard and strawberry-rhubarb jam – which I loved. All the combinations were just perfect."

Her mom praised her lunch, too. "The clam chowder was really rich and good," said Kara. "And the lobster roll was on a buttery roll that was nice and toasted, with huge chunks of lobster – it tasted fantastic. I'd recommend this restaurant for sure. It also has a great wine and beer selection, and it's cozy with a friendly staff, and is almost like eating at a spot in Maine."

commit to noise proffers in the non-generator portions of the building where the employees are."

Civil engineer/architect Jamie Cox added that county Zoning Code Enforcement would respond to complaints and could cite or even shut down the data center.

But Pleasant Valley's Cynthia Shang disagreed. "There's no way for the county to enforce that or do anything about the problem of continuous noise," she said. "The constant, high-pitched hum [from the roof-mounted chillers] can still be incredibly annoying to humans." And a neighbor said it would be even worse in winter when the buffering trees between the center and homes were bare.

Josh Bowden, Penzance's vice president of development, said it would take 12-18 months just to build the exterior. And Pritchard said they'd contribute some $108,000 to the Park Authority if the whole, 402,000-square-foot facility is approved.

But the discussion didn't end there; it continued at a June 15 meeting of Pleasant Valley residents. Since the data center would be built right behind their 541 homes, Shang warned them its "back-up generators would be noisy and pollute the air. And industrial-zoned land has no requirements to mitigate noise and pollution.

"The applicant's 27 diesel generators will run during maintenance and emergencies, and when the data center needs more electricity from the grid. The decibel level then will be 63 dba, which is higher than allowed in our neighborhood. The noise will also affect wildlife and people working in the nearby office buildings."

Pritchard returned to the Joint Land-Use Committee on June 19, saying they'd only have 20 generators; yet the county staff report lists 27. He said maintenance would be done in 30-minute increments, two hours/day, and "any leaking oil from the diesel generators would be caught and contained onsite."

Virginia Run's Jim Hart asked if large, semitrucks coming west on Route 50 would have to make a U-turn at Pleasant Valley Road to access the site. Pritchard initially said they would, so they could make a right turn into the site, but later said they'd have other options.

Another resident asked if Penzance would commit to using something other than diesel generators, but Pritchard said no. And when another person asked, "Will the applicant commit to any limits on electrical or water consumption?" Pritchard again answered no.

However, Cox said, "We can't use so much water that there won't be enough for your homes or fire emergencies. And there are no chemicals added to the water going into the data center."

WFCCA's John Litzenberger asked if power lines would be above or below ground, and Cox said, "Transmission lines will be underground, and Dominion would have to build us a new, electric substation. It'll be a community substation for other commercial uses, as well."

Pleasant Valley's Ed Duggan asked, "Why don't you build the substation yourself, instead of having the citizens, ultimately, pay for it?" But Cox only replied that Dominion said it must be offsite.

"Will you do periodic noise studies?" asked Sully District Council's Jeff Parnes. Pritchard said they'd do them both before and after construction.

"What if there's a brownout and there's not enough power from the grid for you to run your generators?" asked SDC's Jay Johnston. "Then you'd have to run your generators 12 hours/day."

Replied Pritchard: "We don't have an answer to that."

"If the power goes out, you've got a backup – we don't," said Johnston. "You all are going to suck all the power out. A data center would use more water and power than a car dealership or warehouse would – so why would we want this?"

"The tax revenue to the county would be about $100 million," said Pritchard. "A data center is a cash cow – a huge moneymaker. It'll mean less money the county has to raise to do its work. And data centers don't require services, such as schools."

However, said Pleasant Valley's Scott Gorvett, "A data center, with its noise and other adverse effects, could cause a $35,000 drop in my home's value. And you're taking this money away from all 541 homeowners."

"It'll grow the tax base, and I'm glad about the underground power lines," said Litzenberger. "But if I lived in Pleasant Valley, I wouldn't want it there. And I don't think the applicant has adequately addressed the environmental issues." The Land-Use Committee then deferred its recommendation until a later date.

Data Center Proposal Generates Unanswered Questions

Earth.com – an Internet site devoted to providing information about earth and the environment – published an article last week with the headline, "What are we willing to give up for computing power?"

It referred to a research paper written by doctoral candidates at the University of California, Riverside, and stated that "The increasing demand for computing power generates a variety of environmental consequences."

According to the paper, "The pollutants generated by data centers pose significant health risks. These include increased chances of cancer, heart disease [and] shortened lifespans. Consequently, residents living near these power plants bear the brunt of these environmental and health impacts."

It's not surprising then that the residents of Chantilly's Pleasant Valley community, as well as others in Fairfax County, are giving serious scrutiny to a proposal to construct a huge data center. And they hope the Board of Supervisors will do likewise and not be swayed by the large amount of tax dollars it would bring.

Pleasant Valley's Cynthia Shang and her neighbors still have a slew of concerns that haven't yet been addressed to their satisfaction, such as how much water the data center would use. And despite the developer's contention that any diesel leaks will be contained onsite, they're still worried about the possibility of contaminating the county's drinking water.

"What are the impacts of potential fuel leaks from 27, 500-gallon diesel fuel tanks, plus the 5,000-gallon base tanks each of them would have?" Shang wondered. "And what plans are in place to ensure that any such leaks won't negatively impact the RPA [Resource Protection Area] or the Cub Run Stream?"

Likewise, Virginia Run's Jim Hart, a former Fairfax County planning commissioner, worries about "so much diesel fuel delivered and stored in an environmentally sensitive stream valley, as well as such an intense use adjacent to homes zoned residential conservation. ... The applicant has been unwilling to commit to cleaner technology than diesel generators."

Loudoun County already has 115 data centers, more than 40 have been built in Prince William County and more are in the pipeline in both counties. Nearly 50 already exist in Fairfax County, including one along Route 50 near the Fairfax/Loudoun border. And now, a 2.3 million-square-foot data center park is planned for construction by Starwood Capital Group near 13832 Redskin Drive in the Oak Hill section of the Sully District.

So, in light of this proliferation of data centers, Hart has a few more questions about air pollution because of them as well as "the cumulative effect of data centers on the region, on air quality and health. What are the long-term effects on human health and the environment? And how many data centers are too many if we're maxed out on air quality already?"

We Need Your Help Again
We are sincerely grateful and thankful to you for helping in 2021 to save one of America's oldest newspapers, the Alexandria Gazette Packet, publishing continuously since 1784

Thank you to the hundreds of supporters who helped to keep all your Connection Newspapers alive throughout Alexandria, Fairfax County, Arlington County and Potomac, Md. along with affiliated websites and digital media. Now we need help again in 2022.

Each local newspaper's mission aspires to provide greater community service, and we do know that our communities are better off if we continue to publish. Last year's financial support from readers and supporters like you bridged the shortfall before Federal PPP funding arrived, and both made our survival possible. We now await a decision for a grant from Rebuild Virginia in early February that we hope will help us in 2022 and beyond. But we need help to survive the first quarter, always a brutal time for cash flow in weekly newspapers. Thank you.

Please, help save these historical papers. All gifts will be used to fund our printed newspapers and websites and to meet obligations to our loyal and patient employees, writers, contractors and suppliers.

The ongoing pandemic continues to crush many newspapers across the country, and our newspapers continue to be at risk. The Northern Virginia area's best read and most trusted source for community news includes the Alexandria Gazette Packet, Mount Vernon Gazette and all Connection Newspapers in the metropolitan region.

The pandemic has hit small businesses hard, which in turn has reduced advertising revenue that keeps these local newspapers alive to provide hyper-local news to residents. It feels like no small miracle to be looking forward into 2022.

The pandemic has been a bear, financially and otherwise. Revenue plummeted at the beginning in 2020. Some beloved advertisers have stayed the course supporting us throughout, and many more have done what they can. In the fall of 2021 we saw the return of some advertising for events and Grand Openings, but now ominous clouds the horizon in so many ways. Revenue still remains short of expenses despite our greatly curtailed costs.

Connection Newspapers has been offering these local newspapers to residents for over 200 years. Countless residents have grown up with these papers covering significant moments in the lives of family and children, news, community events, school activities, and even pictures of your dogs and cats. Internet news and large national newspapers cannot provide the local connection or historical connection that local papers like Connection Newspapers and the Alexandria Gazette Packet provide. If your child, dog, mother, father, neighborhood, school has been featured, you understand the value of local community newspapers.

The Context Was Clothes

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

One of the mundane tasks that falls to the family members of a recently deceased person is what to do with his or her clothes – and when to do it. For my sister-in-law, Vanessa, the process was not as excruciating as with others I've known. Having lived in the same house for nearly 30 years, keeping my brother's clothes in some sort of stasis as a means of honoring/memorializing his memory was not important to her. She has plenty of reminders of Richard. In fact, she has his ashes in an urn she keeps in the adjacent/Richard's bedroom, the room where Vanessa discovered my brother lying on the floor that final morning of his life. The room where Vanessa performed CPR on him while a 911 operator instructed her what to do. Can you imagine?

It was in this room, on his bed, where Vanessa had laid our Richard's summer wardrobe for me to pick through. While I hesitated, Vanessa assured me, as I would have guessed, that Richard would have wanted me to have these hand-me-downs-of-his-lifetime. And though it felt awkward trying on his pants, shirts, shorts, shoes, et cetera, it sort of felt cathartic in a way wearing things I had seen him wear. It also provided some light moments as we all joked about how much clothing he had accumulated.

Another predictable task for survivors is to find and organize old photographs of the deceased. Eventually, after the period of grieving has passed, looking through the old photographs conjures up more pleasant memories as the pain of loss begins to subside and you eke out a smile or two. It's an important transition suggesting that there is a future after all, despite this tragedy.

Before we arrived, Vanessa had been going through some old boxes and found a newspaper article about my father. He was 69 and a half and nine months or so away from retirement. On Richard's bedside table lay a brown 5 x 7 manilla envelope. I opened the envelope, per Vanessa's encouragement and there was a folded edition of the Middlesex News, the local community newspapers from Framingham, Ma., where my parents had lived for 17 years before retiring to Florida. Across the top, I could read the faded and yellowing date: Feb. 18, 1989. I opened the fold and in black and white saw a picture of my father sitting at his desk in their Framingham appointment holding one of his many jewelry sample cases. The headline above his picture? "Turning Gray to Green." The article was about the "financial clout" seniors had – as a specific market for advertisers and businesses' to target, and a lucrative one at that.

It was a rather lengthy article, nearly have a page in a broadsheet on the inside with my father's picture on the outside beneath which was "captioned" "Barry Lourie at his Framingham home." He was one of six "elders" interviewed/quoted in the article. As I read through the article, I took notice of my father's quotes. As I read – and reread his quotes, I could almost hear him talking. In addition, I was focused as well on his words/speech patterns trying to glean any familiar jargon or speech pattern, as my father had a unique way of expressing himself. Reading him speak like that was time-travelling for me. It was the first time I had heard his voice/read his words since his death on Dec. 3rd, 2006, nearly 17 years ago. I only wish my brother and I could have shared this feeling together. Interacting with my father like this was like a gift from God, and so unexpected. This jolt of a memory transported me back in time. It occurred while I was sifting through my recently deceased brother's clothes. Go figure. I've often heard it said that clothes make the man. In this experience, clothes made the memory, and a memory I will cherish forever. Almost as if my brother's premature death was not totally in vain.

It has just so happened that a couple of good things have come from Richard's death. None more important than the reconnection I shared with my father.

Kenny Lourie is an Advertising Representative for The Potomac Almanac & The Connection Newspapers.
